ASK FOR RULING IN EDDY CASE

Arguments were made to-day before the full bench of the Supreme Court in the friendly suit brought by the directors of the Christian Science Church in which they seek to have turned over to them the Commonwealth avenue and Newton homes of the late Mary Baker Eddy.

The only obstacle in the way is Section 9, of Chapter 37 of the Revised Laws of Massachusetts which is as follows: "The income of the gifts, grants, bequests and devises made to or for the use of any one church shall not exceed $2,000 a year, exclusive of the income of any parsonage land granted to or for the use of the ministry."

Mrs. Eddy made a trust of her former residence on Commonwealth avenue, Boston, and her Newton home, and provided that at her death the trust should terminate and the property be disposed of according to her will. The directors of the Christian Science church, which Mrs. Eddy founded, claim both properties under the residuary clause of her will.

The trustees of the property are willing to turn it over to the directors of the Christian Science Church, but declare that they have been informed by counsel that the court may hold that the church cannot take the property because of the Massachusetts law.

The income from the estates is a great deal more than $2,000 a year. The directors of the Christian Science Church claim that they are entitled to the property, as Mrs. Eddy intended that income from it should be used in extending the religion which she founded.

Samuel J. Elder in his argument for the directors, contended that no question can now arise under the statute, for, if the effect of the statute be to prevent the church from holding the trust fund, the question is one which can only be raised by the Commonwealth in proceedings started directly by it. He further argued that the will constituted a public charitable trust which a court of equity may protect and enforce.

Charles F. Choate, counsel for the trustees, said: "The Commonwealth as stakeholders, have no further interest than to discharge their duty in a proper manner, and they join with the plaintiffs in submitting these questions to the court."

COURT DISBARS CANTON LAWYER

Jean Everett of Canton, for thirty-two years a lawyer, was disbarred to-day by a decision handed down in the Superior Court in Dedham by Chief Justice Aiken upon petition by the Norfolk Bar Association presented nearly three years ago. There were twenty-two specifications in the complaint. The proceedings against Everett involved a transaction whereby Mrs. Matilda Curtis of Lynn exchanged her home in that city for a farm in Cambridge. In regard to the farm transaction, Chief Justice Aiken finds that "the signature of Sarah Smith was made by Everett."

WONG KEE PAYS $50 FOR SELLING OPIUM

Wong Kee, a Chinaman, of No. 42 Harrison avenue, pleaded guilty to-day in the Municipal Police Court to the charge of delivering opium to agents of the Watch and Ward Society, and paid a fine of $50. The evidence was obtained by Agent Stanley of the society, who is well known in Chinatown, and who hinted in his face before making his trip to the district with Agent Williams of the society.

"GUILTY" PLEA OF NURSE

Miss Amelia Leonard, the nurse who has been in the Charles street jail since her arrest several weeks ago for the theft of $8,000 worth of jewelry from two Back Bay women whom she nursed, to-day pleaded guilty to the theft of two rings, specified in the first count of the indictment against her.

It was understood that she would be sent to the women's prison at Sherborn for an indefinite term.

Miss Leonard was arraigned before Judge Stevens in the Superior Court. Before she was brought in a conference was held between the court, District Attorney Pelletier, his assistant, Michael J. Dwyer, and Lawyer Edward Carr, representing Miss Leonard.

At the conclusion of the conference Lawyer Carr went to the detention room and talked with Miss Leonard. He returned and a second conference was held. He then spoke to Court Officer Tracey and at 12:15 o'clock Miss Leonard entered the room, followed by Tracey.

Smiles in Courtroom.

She was dressed in a blue suit with a blue beaver hat. Her veil was lifted from her face as she came in and she was smiling. She wore glasses. Just inside the court room door she hesitated undecided as to which way to go. She turned to the court officer.

"Which way shall I go?"

Tracey indicated an aisle leading to the seat outside the iron cage. Miss Leonard sat down and almost immediately arose when her name was called by Clerk Manning.

"Amelia M. Leonard," said the clerk, "what say you to so much of the first count of the indictment which charges larceny of one finger ring and one ring?"

"Guilty." Miss Leonard hesitated a ..... When she did she spoke in a firm tone. Clerk Manning then said:

"You will be here in this court at 2:30 o'clock, at which time sentence will be passed upon you." He then turned, indicating that Miss Leonard might go.

"Oh, thank you very much," replied the girl, and she left the room as she spoke.

Rides in Prison Van.

Miss Leonard was brought from her cell in the Charles street jail to the court house before 11 o'clock. The trip over was made in the police van with two other women. When she reached the court house she was placed in the detention room.

Lawyer Carr arrived a short time after. In the meantime, the prosecution prepared to try the case. Twelve witnesses were brought to the building by Inspectors Mitchell and Shields.

The witnesses were all prominent people. Among them were Colonel William A. Gaston, president of the National Shawmut Banks, Mrs. May Gaston, Mrs. Marion L. Greene, Miss Annie Pecker and her mother, Hamilton J. F. Lockwood, Dr. Gilchen and Mr. Loughlin, a brother-in-law of Colonel Gaston.

The indictment found against Miss Leonard charged her in two counts with the larceny of $8,185.45 from Miss Mary J. Lockwood, who died at the Hotel Bromfield some time ago, and Miss Annie J. Pecker of No. 160 Mount Vernon street. All but $321 worth of the stuff was also on from Miss Lockwood.

The two rings which she pleaded guilty to stealing were valued at $3,100 and $1,000.

The sum of $50,000 is to be held in trust for Sarah J. F. Johnson and Olivia Yardley Rowditch, at their death is to be divided among the New England Hospital, Radcliffe College and the town of Hanover. "KILLING DENIED BY FERNALD

PLYMOUTH, March 15.—Charles P. Fernald to-day took the stand in his own behalf at his trial here for the murder of Joseph H. Hellieur last March in the town of Onset. Fernald denied that he struck Hellieur or had anything to do with causing the wounds on the head from which Hellieur died.

Fernald admitted that he put Hellieur out of his shop, saying that he led him to the door and with his hand on his shoulder told him to get out. Fernald said he did not have his billiard cue in his hand, and that he did not leave the shop that night.

"I did not have my cue in my hand. I did not hold it but end up. I did not strike or threaten Hellieur. I did not go beyond the door of my place and when I closed up the shop I went upstairs with my wife. I was under the influence of liquor," said Fernald in answer to questions on direct examination by his attorney, H. H. Baker.

Tells of Fatal Night.

"I was born forty-eight years ago in Searsport, Maine," testified Fernald. "I have lived twenty-one years in Onset, and been in business there twenty years. I was married nineteen years ago and have three children—Blanche, eight years old; Gertrude fourteen, and Chester twelve years.

"On the night of March 14 I had supper at 5 o'clock, and went into the shop at 6 o'clock. A man I knew only as 'Big Jim' came in and another man named Smith. Others came in until there were seven men playing pool and in the shop. Hellieur came in about 9 o'clock.

"From about 7 o'clock on we had five quarts of liquor, each man chipping in. At one time some one asked Hellieur to put in something, and I said: 'You can't get that exameniller to slip in anything.' Hellieur refused to chip in. Later he was asked again and so refused. About 9:30 I said to him:

"'Jimmy, you get out of here.' I leaned my cue up against the wall, and I took Hellieur by the shoulder and pushed him out of the shop. He made no resistance.

Mrs. Joy Faints Again.

The afternoon session was taken up with Fernald's cross-examination by District Attorney Barker.

In anticipation of Fernald's testimony the largest crowd of the trial filled the courtroom to-day. During the morning session Mrs. Eugenie Joy, widow of Hellieur, fainted for the second time during the trial.

Mrs. Elizabeth Forgeld, wife of the defendant, testified that her husband was intoxicated on the night of the fatal row with Hellieur.

Alfred J. Hellieur, brother of the dead man, was called by the defence, though he was originally a State witness. He testified that he talked with Hellieur on the Tuesday and Wednesday following the trouble with Fernald, and that he saw Hellieur eat some bananas. This contradicts testimony given by Hellieur's widow that he could not talk or eat on Tuesday and Wednesday.

RUSSO-CHINESE WAR IMMINENT

ST. PETERSBURG, March 15.—Russian troops, including cavalry and artillery, today received orders to be ready at a moment's notice to cross the Chinese frontier in the direction of Kuldja, Eastern Turkestan.

Admiral Skrydloff is strongly of the opinion that the Black Sea fleet should be reinforced, in expectation of active events which he believes are imminent.

"Austria-Hungary and Turkey," he says, "are nothing more than puppets in order to reorganize their naval forces.

"The Japanese are secretly preparing to participate with the Chinese in the approaching war against Russia and the Austrians are influencing the Turks in the same manner and with the same object.

"Our sources of information are known. I do not hesitate to predict that Turkey aims at taking back from us the provinces we won from her as well as the Caucasus."

THE REAL REASON TO RESCUE MUTT AND JEFF

CAMORRA JURY FILLED AT LAST

VITERBO, March 15.—After much difficulty a jury was secured to-day for the trial of the thirty-six members of the Camorra who are charged, in various degrees, with the murders of their fellow thieves, Gennaro Cuoccolo and the latter's wife, Maria Cutinelli Cuoccolo.

The four oath left court when court adjourned yesterday were filled during the forenoon and two jurors in addition to those required by law were also sworn in.

When the last juror had qualified, President Bianchi adjourned court until afternoon.

Carabineers, cavalry and government agents to-day started a crusade against suspicious strangers. A score were driven from Viterbo to-day. They were warned not to return upon penalty of arrest and imprisonment. Among them were relatives of Enrico Alfano, head of the band, who is on trial with thirty-eight others.

It came to the ears of Cavaliere Bianchi, president of the Assize, that a large part of the $1000 raised to defend the Camorristi was being used in an illegal way and that prospective jurors and witnesses had been offered bribes to disappear. If this failed agents of the Camorra resorted to threats.

MACVEAGH ON U. S. FINANCES

Secretary MacVeagh of the United States Treasury, was in Boston for a short time to-day, en route to Jefferson, N. H., where he will take a short rest. He declined to discuss the Mexican situation but told how the finances of the country stood.

"The treasury will close the current fiscal year to end June 30 next, with a total deficit of something like $30,000,000," he said. "However, if the expenditures for the Panama canal, for which the treasury will be reimbursed ultimately, were excluded, we would show a surplus for the year of between $20,000,000 and $30,000,000. Panama canal expenditures call for about $36,000,000 this year."

HAY AND GRAIN TAKE BIG DROP

WORCESTER, March 15.—The price of hay and grain has taken a big drop. Hay is selling for $13 a ton and oats at 88 cents a bag. These are the lowest prices here in years. Canadian shippers have sent so much hay over the border that New England prices had to sag. There was a big crop last Summer and there is also an overstocked oats market. The 88 cents price is quoted for large quantities. By the bag the maximum price at present is $1. Corn has fallen twenty or thirty cents to $1.20 a bag.

PITCHFORK IS USED IN FIGHT ON FARM

PEABODY, March 15.—John Cunningham, thirty-four, is under arrest on the charge of assaulting Arthur V. Cunningham, fifty-nine, at the latter's farm on Ruggles street, in West Peabody. The elder Cunningham is suffering from cuts on the face and a stab wound in the shoulder. The younger man is suffering from wounds on the body he says were inflicted with a pitchfork. The police say the men quarrelled yesterday, and that they resumed the altercation to-day.

"GREEN WHIST" FRIDAY.

Mrs. Richard A. Ignech, president of the Ladies' Aid Society in connection with the Italy Industrial School, will give a "Green Whist" at the school St. Patrick's Day. Over 500 invitations have been sent out. Favors will be distributed.

SWEARS BROKERS CROSSED ORDERS

Additional evidence showing that the failed brokerage firm of Sederquist, Barry & Co, sold the same amount of stock that they were ordered to buy to various customers was offered to-day at the trial of the four members of the firm for conspiracy and thefts.

The evidence was given by Elmer E. George, former cashier for the firm. Two accounts in regard to which he testified were those of W. J. Ballou and Kathryn E. Bettle.

The witness testified that on May 18, 1909, the firm was ordered to buy fifty shares of United Fruit for Ballou. On the same date he found an entry of the sales blotter of the firm showing that they sold the same amount of United Fruit stock for a firm account. The prosecution charges that the firm "crossed" their orders.

In the case of the account of Kathryn L. Bettle the date was March 27. The account showed the purchase of fifty shares of Granby, while a similar sale for a similar amount of Granby was recorded.

MANY CHANGES DUE TO B. & M. MERGER

Already the control of the Boston & Maine railroad by the New Haven is felt all along the system. In many places where the tracks of the two roads meet, and where hitherto have been two distinct sets of station buildings, freight houses and road employes, plans are now being made for but one station, one freight house and one set of employes. This is true, also, on the different divisions of the Boston & Maine, where at places divisions come together. At Fitchburg, where the two systems converge, changes that are estimated will cost $500,000 are being made, including the erection of a new freight house and the removal of the union station to a more convenient location.

ALL RAILROADS RESTORE OLD RATES

WASHINGTON, March 15.—All the railroad officials of the consolidation territory which were prevented from increasing the freight rates have complied with the interstate commerce commission decision that no advances would be permitted. From examinations to-day of the 15,000-rate confirmation filed with the commission it was found that every railroad has restored the old rates.

GRAND JURY CLOSES IN CANNON'S COUNTY

DANVILLE, Ill., March 15.—Although adjourned and of no further danger to local politicians, the Vermillion county grand jury (Cannon's county) has left a legacy in the form of a resolution which requires the county auditor to subpoena the court. Thirty-six indictments were returned in the six weeks the jury was in session.

NEW CRISIS IN MEXICAN REVOLUTION

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The whole United States standing army may be mobilized on the Mexican frontier. This report became current to-day upon receipt of news from the southern republic to the effect that the revolution had spread to many sections of the country hitherto unaffected.

The information relative to the outbreak of insurrecto violence in new districts south of the Rio Grande is said to have been received by Major-General Carter, in command of the troops concentrated in the Department of Texas. Practically 5,000 troops will be shifted for patrol duty along the border within the next few days.

MEXICAN TROOPS PENNED IN CITY.

The War Department is also receiving confidential messages relative to internal affairs in Mexico. The worst fears are entertained for the city of Chihuahua, where 2,500 federal troops are practically beleaguered by insurrectos. The rebel force encamped about that city are said to number nearly 5,000 men.

The two Americans, Converse and Biatt, seized near the border, are still being held by the Mexican federals, pending diplomatic negotiations which are now going forward. It is said, but unofficially, that Mexico has made a strong protest against the stand taken by the United States over the arrest and detention of the two Americans.

That the suspension of constitutional guarantees is still a matter of discussion by the Mexican government and has not been definitely determined upon was reported by Charge d'Affaires Dearing to the State Department to-day.

Rebels Capture City.

United States Consul Freeman has received advices from Consular Agent Lawrence that the revolutionists have captured the town of Topia after forty-eight hours of hard fighting.

The four San Diego newspapermen who were reported to have fallen into the hands of revolutionists, while automobiling near the border are safe and sound, according to advices received by the State Department from Ensenada to-day. Their machine broke down near Guadalupe three days ago and they were unable to communicate their plight to San Diego until to-day.

The administration's position in regard to the Mexican situation was clearly outlined here to day.

From prominent persons who are in President Taft's confidence the progress has been revealed, and it is almost the sole topic of conversation in government diplomatic circles at the Capital.

American and other outside interests are still in jeopardy in Mexico. The President means to protect these interests. He will do it first from the American side of the line. He will cut off all the revolutionists' resources and in doing that give Diaz one more opportunity to handle the situation. If the Mexican government finds the necessity for invasion will have action.

War Game Incidental.

This is exactly what the President set out to do when he gave the order for the mobilization of the 20,000 troops. The manoeuvre idea was incidental then, just as it is incidental now. The object of the assembling of the troops is to maintain neutrality, and if that is not effective in stopping the revolution then the American troops will cross the border.

This information is authoritative and comes from sources which are perhaps closer to Mr. Taft in Washington than even Cabinet officers.

Six troops of cavalry are to be added to the force on the border.

According to dispatches received by the Navy Department, the gunboat Cheyenne left Vera Cruz, Mexico, for Puerto Cortes, Honduras, and the gunboat Tacoma left Puerto Mexico for Galveston yesterday.

Staples, a tower tender, were identified to-day by the City Hospital authorities as Joseph Shaffer of No. 7 Lingold street. The dead men's names are David Parkhison of Trenton and A. E. Mittens, who hails from England. Both men were living at No. 7 Lingold street and were employed by the Paul Revere Silver Plating Company, No. 296 Congress street. Parkinson has relatives in Trenton. The latter's pocket was found a letter from England addressed: "My Dear Husband." It is believed the men intended riding to Syracuse, where they have friends and while attempting to board a freight train met with the accident. Assistant Medical Examiner Leary will hold the bodies at the morgue until the men's relatives have been communicated with.

NEW BRIBE INQUIRY IN LORIMER CASE

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. March 15.—United States Senator William Lorimer is to be further investigation of his election to the Senate. The then investigating committee of the State Senate actively began its work to-day. Lorimer's assertion that a seat was purchased is said to be in the committee's possession. It is also said to have names of corporations and individuals who supplied assemblymen or influenced legislation.

TIPS TO CONTESTANTS

By THE CONTEST EDITOR.

"The best laid schemes o' mice and men gang aft a-gley."

The above wisdom of Robbie Burns applies to prize contests, as to everything else.

The Contest Editor tries to arrange matters so that the routine work for candidates will slip along with the least possible friction.

But accidents will happen. Many of them can be avoided with a little care, especially those troubles about newsdealers' orders and return post cards. It is about those two things that the Contest Editor wishes to talk about to-day.

Each of candidates, who wish to subscribe for their benefit, make trouble for themselves AND FOR THE CANDIDATE, by not following instructions closely. The instructions are made as simple and as few as possible.

But the few that are laid down are ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY, for the protection of subscriber, candidate and Contest Department alike.

It is essential that, when a subscriber receives the newsdealer's order and return post card, after sending in a subscription, that the subscriber take both these cards to the newsdealer. The order is to be given to the newsdealer to keep. It constitutes his authority for delivering the Sunday AMERICAN to the subscriber.

The return post card is to be filled out and sent back to the Contest Department. This is necessary, in order that the Contest Department may know that the delivery order has gone through.

The best way for the subscriber to do, in regard to the return post card, is to take it to the newsdealer, see that the newsdealer fills it out properly, legibly and in full, and then have the subscriber take it and mail it back to the Contest Department himself.

Failure of the return post card to come back obliges the Contest Department to send out a duplicate order to see what has become of the return post card. The Contest Department MUST have these return post cards back in order to post entries properly on its books. Another thing:

Candidates complain in some cases that their subscribers have not received newsdealers' orders and return postcards at all. They become alarmed.

Alarm is unnecessary. The Contest Department sends out its orders and postcards promptly. But in case the subscriber has made a mistake in his own address, which sometimes occurs, or in case the address is incomplete or illegibly written, which more often occurs, the Contest Department is unable to find the subscriber immediately. Orders and return postcards are sent out in effort to reach the subscriber. But sometimes they are sent back by the postoffice because the subscriber cannot be found.

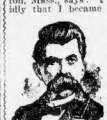
In that case, or in case of delay from any other cause, the duplicate order comes to the rescue again. These orders are sent to the candidate, so he can help straighten out the difficulty. It is necessary then for the candidate to ascertain the proper name and full address of the subscriber, so that the subscription may go through properly and so that the subscriber may get his paper.

Our old college friend "Typographical Error" got in his fine work in the list of candidates' standing which was printed last Sunday. The name of William T. Burke of No. 217 Havre street, East Boston, was omitted through one of these errors. Mr. Burke should have occupied twelfth position in the District row standing.

The name Frederic Cowell, Dorchester, in District One, should have read Frederic A. Cowell of Dorchester.

A Marvelous Recovery

Milton, Mass., Man Permanently Cured of Terrible Kidney Trouble.



C. H. Foster, 180 Thatcher St., Milton, Mass., says: "I ran down so rapidly that I became thin and pale as death. A urinary trouble annoyed me constantly. I had sharp, shooting pains in various parts of my body and I grew tired and languid. I had the kidney secretions examined by a physician, who said I was in bad shape and advised a change of climate. At that time the urine was very dark and unnatural. I used half a dozen boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills. During that time the backache left, appetite improved, weight picked up twenty pounds and I felt well and strong. The trouble never returned."

AUSTRIA READY FOR GREEK WAR

LARISSA, March 15.—As a result of incidents on the Graeco-Turkish frontier, Austria-Hungary has sent four cruisers and five battleships to Greek waters. These warships are now anchored in the Gulf of Volo.

The supposition here is that Austria is carrying out a plan perfected in recent years of immediately taking possession of Salonica in the event of war between Greece and Turkey.

Relations between Greeks and Turks all along the frontier are strained as they have not been since 1897. If Turkey is looking for a quarrel it may readily be opened.

At Derell, where Turks fired upon Greek peasants entering the village, the Greek post immediately went to the rescue of the remainder of the men. The Turkish post took part in the fight, which lasted from morning until 7 o'clock in the evening. Eight Turks were killed, but no Greeks. Ottoman officials have been forbidden to discuss the fracas.

Put an Extra Stomach to Work

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets Will Do the Work of Two or Three Stomachs. Affords Instant Relief.

FREE TRIAL PACKAGE

When your food does not digest, when gases form, when you experience that uncomfortable feeling of fullness, when the breath is foul, the tongue coated and that sour taste is in the mouth—take a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet and watch how quickly every one of these symptoms disappears. All that was needed was to digest that lump of food in your stomach,—and the glands, whose duty it is to supply the gastric juices, had simply given out from overwork. So when you took that little tablet you were supplying exactly what was necessary to complete the process of digestion that the stomach had begun but was unable to finish.

If you would continue to take a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet after each meal for a while, your stomach would have a chance to rest up and get well and strong again.

Try just one box and you will never want to be without this wonderful little remedy for stomach troubles. Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain an ingredient, one grain of which will digest 3,000 grains of food. They are so entirely harmless because they have absolutely no effect on the system one way or another except to do just the one thing—digest food.

40,000 physicians use and recommend this National Remedy. Every drug store everywhere sells and recommends Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. The price is 50 cents per box. A sample will be sent free if you will write F. A. Stuart Co., 151 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

MANICURISTS IN FIGHT ON TAX

Representative women manicurists of Boston made vigorous protest at the State House to-day against a bill now pending which would license manicurists and massage parlors, and place them under the supervision of the police. The bill was put in by the Boston police.

Miss Lillian C. O'Donnell of No. 420 Boylston street, representing the Manicure and Beauty Specialists' Association of Boston, said:

"The organization I represent held a meeting last night. The manicurists of Boston object to this bill. We object to this tax."

Miss Margaret M. Bellam, a manicurist, of No. 2 Park square, said:

"This bill would mean a hardship on us. We are opposed to it."

Police Lieutenant William H. Crowley, the petitioner; Deputy Superintendent Cain of the Lagrange street station and L. Q. Rogers, secretary to Police Commissioner O'Meara, spoke in favor of the bill.

"There are thirty-five manicure establishments, thirty-four massage parlors and sixteen vapor bath rooms in Boston," said Mr. Rogers. "Regulations will work no hardship on the legitimate places."

Deputy Superintendent Cain declared that the bill is needed as it is difficult now to obtain evidence against unlawful places masquerading under the guise of manicuring establishments.

Mrs. Charlotte Smith, the social worker, opposed the bill, saying: "It is an insult to women. The police simply want more power."

MAYOR SHOWS PERIL OF FIRE

Mayor Fitzgerald today told the Committee on Cities that if the Legislature does not quickly amend the fire hazard law for Boston, the Dorchester section will sooner or later be wiped out by a conflagration which will kill hundreds and destroy millions in property.

He appeared in favor of a bill presented by his recently appointed Fire Hazard Commission, asking for several safeguards in the building laws. Here are some of the changes favored:

Some Changes Favored.

No building to be lathed until a building inspector has passed on the framework.

No roofs to be built of inflammable material.

Every foundation to a building to be of granite, brick, concrete, or rubble lathed and mortared.

No wooden building to be more than three stories nor more than forty-five feet high.

No wooden building to be built within five feet of any other building lot or within ten feet of any other wooden building.

Wooden buildings built in blocks to be separated from each other by party walls of brick or concrete.

"What happened in Chelsea is not a patch on what will happen in Dorchester if a conflagration ever starts there," said the Mayor. "To appreciate conditions here you must travel through the district. I live there, and I know what the conditions are.

Shows Peril of Fire.

"There are acres, yes, square miles, of wooden buildings built closely together, within the present building restrictions, of course, but in such a way that a fire, once started, would go through them like so much cordwood. The whole of Dorchester would be laid waste.

"The first thought, of course, should be for human lives, and a human life is one of the things that here would be wiped out to the extent of several hundreds."

Fire Commissioner Charles P. Daly, Building Commissioner Arthur G. Edwards, School Commissioner Charles J. Logue, J. Randolph Coolidge, Jr., the architect, and Arthur L. Spring, legislative counsel for Boston, also favored the changes.

GOWN DISPLAY IN WALKER CASE

NEWPORT, March 15.—Gorgeous hats and stunning gowns continue to be leading features of the Walker divorce suit, in which Mrs. Nina Chinn Walker is plaintiff. James Wilson G. Walker, civil engineer, U. S. A., defendant, and Miss Mabel Corcoran of Boston the corespondent.

When court opened to-day Miss Helen E. Hull of Pittsfield, Mass., a brunette, appeared in a black princess gown with a huge picture hat. Miss Sarah C. Walker, sister of the respondent, wore a peach basket hat that attracted much attention. Miss Ida Russell Bartlett of Lonsdale, R. I., looked fetching in a blue gown and a smart hat. Walker's side of the case is being heard. All the witnesses testified he treated his children kindly, this in contradiction to Mrs. Walker's charges of cruelty. Miss Hull, Miss Alice Putnam Mullin of Salem, Miss Walker, Dr. John F. Thomas of Boston, brother-in-law of the respondent; Miss Mary F. McMahon, Henry Pickering Walker, Miss Mary F. Bangs, Henry G. Pickering and Miss Ida R. Bartlett all testified to having visited the Walkers at various times and that Walker always treated the children kindly. None of them saw him pay any attentions to Miss Corcoran.

Miss Sarah C. Walker, sister of the respondent, told about the box theatre party which included Miss Corcoran. She had never understood that Mrs. James Walker was to be left out as he had claimed. Didn't know that her brother paid special attention to Miss Corcoran to the exclusion of his wife. Miss Mary F. McMahon, waitress and domestic, employed now by Mr. Walker at the training station, testified that the relations between Mr. Walker and his children were very cordial. Never saw him punish the children with an Indian whip. She said Walker got up at 8:45 in the morning but that Mrs. Walker got up and had her breakfast at 7:45 alone.

Miss Mary Freeman Bangs, private secretary to the respondent's mother, said she spent some time with the defendant's family in 1909, in Washington and declared the relations between the father and children to be affectionate.

GERMAN SONGS

MR. TOWNSEND IN

Stephen Townsend, the well-known baritone, gave a recital in Steinert Hall last night, of unusual interest to lovers of German song. Mr. Townsend sang the famous Franz Schubert song cycle "The Pretty Miller's Daughter, in English. He used a special translation which admirably preserves both the poetry and music of the original words, and permits the auditor to comprehend the spirit and intentions of the composer, something impossible ordinarily unless one is familiar with the German tongue. Max Heindrich, who accompanied Mr. Townsend, gave a short talk upon the Schubert cycle before the concert proper commenced. Mr. Townsend sang soulfully and tunefully and with excellent appreciation of his text.

MANY SUFFER FROM HUNGER IN LABRADOR

NORTH SYDNEY, C. B., March 15.—That the rigorous Winter just closing has caused extreme suffering and probably many deaths among the hardy inhabitants of the barren Labrador peninsular, who have been cut off for months from the possibility of securing food and clothing by great ice-fields, is the fear felt here and in Newfoundland. The last reports from the bleak country to the north, which were received late last Fall, said that the food supplies were almost exhausted and that hundreds of the natives, mainly fisher-folk and their families, were on the verge of starvation.

TAFT PLAYS GOLF WITH LITTLETON

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 15.—President Taft to-day played the most exciting game of golf of his Southern vacation. His opponent was Martin W. Littleton, the New York lawyer and attorney for Charles W. Morse, the convicted New York banker. The score was to be kept secret, although rumor had it that the President won. The President was to attend a practice game of the Boston National League baseball team.

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES

They Are Closely Observing Public Health Conditions

An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview on the subject, made the astonishing statement that the reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of applicants do not even suspect that they have the disease.

He states that judging from his own experience and reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has probably been more successful in relieving and curing these diseases than any remedy known. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of cures.

We find that Swamp-Root is strictly an ethical proprietary and we would advise all readers who feel in need of such a remedy to give it a trial. It is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, fifty-cents and one-dollar.

However, if you wish first to test the preparation, the manufacturers will gladly forward you a sample bottle by mail absolutely free. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and mention this paper.

CALL UPON MEXICO TO FREE PRISONERS

WASHINGTON, March 15.—What is regarded here as a serious diplomatic question has been raised against Friday Morning by Gen. Bliss and Medina, on the request of this country, which is tantamount to a demand, that Mexico release two American prisoners, was laid before Ambassador de la Barra.

The request of Uncle Sam was sent to the Mexican embassy by Huntington Wilson, acting secretary of State. The Mexican government is asked to set free Edwin M. Hurt of Pittsburg, and Lawrence C. Converse of California.

These young men have been imprisoned at Juarez since February 27.

The United States asserts that the two Americans were taken on American soil and that the seizure was a violation of the sovereignty of this government.

A direct issue of fact exists between the two governments on this point, and while an official note declared categorically that the young men were taken on Mexican soil, The State Department in its note to the Mexican Embassy does not qualify its contention that the Americans were kidnaped from this side of the Rio Grande River.

The State Department's present note does not, of course, constitute a demand upon the Mexican government, but, with the "request" joined upon the first, it presents a situation in which one government or the other will be obliged to recede from views already expressed.

Irritates Situation.

The State Department's note is a further irritation to the situation that arises through the hostile activity of the American army and navy in undertaking to prevent filibustering in support of the Madero insurgents.

Edwin M. Hurt is the son of Peter Hurt, a well-to-do wagon manufacturer of Pittsburg. He was a student at St. Vincent's College in Pennsylvania, when in 1909 he left and he went to El Paso. Converse, the other prisoner, is about the same age as Hurt. He is a son of C. H. Converse, a lawyer of Glendora, Cal.

According to the stories told by Hurt and Converse and supported by witnesses, they had crossed the Rio Grande River from Mexico to the American side and had applied at a plantation for work. After eating they had built a fire near the plantation and were sitting before it when they were attacked by three Mexicans.

Tried to Escape.

They tried to get away, but were overpowered. Their hands were tied and they were taken across the river into Mexico, where they were turned over to the Mexican soldiers, and then began their journey to Juarez, where they were imprisoned in the state penitentiary.

Strong influence was immediately brought to bear in behalf of both Hurt and Converse and the investigation of the case made by the Mexican authorities, headed by Andres Martinez, of Mexico, satisfied that the two Americans had been unjustly accused, and in return for the release of Hurt and Converse, Edmund Hurt and Clarence Converse, brothers of the two Americans still at Juarez, sent the following telegram to Secretary of State Knox:

"After a thorough investigation I found that Lawrence and Hurt Converse were duly released by Mexican authorities on Cerro Blanco, Mexico, about 500 feet from American soil, at least 500 feet from the boundary line. They were arrested with the Juarez authorities to vain."

The Mexican Side.

The Mexican government on the other hand, has insisted from the beginning that the two prisoners were taken on Mexican territory and that the charge of aiding the insurrectos was a direct insurrection against the government. It was stated in Mexico City last Sunday, as de la Barra, the Mexican Ambassador to the United States, issued this emphatic statement:

The embassy affirms categorically that Hurt and Converse were taken prisoners in Mexican territory and not on American soil, as has been falsely represented by the press.

This statement was issued after the United States had been informed by cable to the Mexican border.

Senor Bettencourt Pique, the Mexican member of the International Boundary Commission, recently investigated the circumstances on behalf of the Mexican government. He is now in Mexico City with his report and it is understood that he holds that both Hurt and Converse were captured while in Mexican territory.

LARGE AREA IS MADE DESOLATE BY REBELLION

EAGLE PASS, Tex., March 15.—A large area of the northern section of Mexico, stretching for hundreds of square miles south of the Rio Grande, is a desolate waste of bush, scorched by warfare and utterly deserted.

A party of four Americans returned to Eagle Pass after a trip by automobile and horseback through the ravaged section in the State of Coahuila and who had there had traversed for two miles without seeing a single human being. They declared that ranches had been deserted, stock driven off by the insurrectos and farm land left waste by inattention.

The people in the ranch districts are fleeing into the towns, deserting the rural communities because of danger from roving bands of outlaws who pose as insurrectos and in such guise burn and kill without discrimination.

The loss to the "Nesters," or small truck farmers, is running into millions of dollars. For a time the rurales attempted to guard the property of these farmers, but as the rebel forces grew stronger the rurales were moved into the towns to strengthen the garrisons. The big mining and ranch interests, which are principally owned by Americans, have been given leave by the Mexican government to equip men, with arms for the protection of their property. While these armed guards are termed "deputies," they are virtually soldiers, and are licensed to kill all raiders.

The railroads in Northern Chihuahua are unprotected and are out of commission. Small bands of insurrectos, generally led by American soldiers of fortune, have dynamited the trestles and burned bridges and trestles until train service is impossible.

MADERO LEADS INSURRECTOS TO ATTACK OF JUAREZ

EL PASO, March 15.—General Francisco I. Madero with form 1,000 to 1,500 men is marching on Ciudad Juarez with the intention of capturing that city and thus attacking a decisive situation. He plans to effect a junction with the scattered bands of insurrectos, under Captain Creighton, the American soldier of fortune, and other leaders, and to carry out a definite plan of campaign which will give him the complete control of the State of Chihuahua.

Reports from Eagle Pass tend to show that within a few days every inch of Chihuahua will be in active revolt, and the attack on Juarez will be the signal. It is reported, too, that the general outbreak in which Orozco men will take part.

ENLISTING MORE MEN FOR SERVICE ALONG RIO GRANDE

WASHINGTON, March 15.—More than 500 recruits, taken into the service from various parts of the country, arrived here and have been distributed among the regiments. The ranks were filled, largely increased numbers of enlistments, and as fast as the recruits arrive they are put under the most strenuous kind of preliminary training.

The average infantry regiments had on arrival here less than 700 enlisted men, whereas the war strength of a regiment of infantry is 1,500 men and fifty-one officers. The cavalry regiments averaged around 600 enlisted men and their war strength is 1,188, with fifty-one officers and two veterinarians to the regiment.

MEXICAN OUTLAW LEADER FIGHTING WITH DYNAMITE

NACO, Ariz., March 15.—"Red" Lopez, a notorious Mexican outlaw, alleged to be wanted by the sheriff of a dozen counties for his criminal deeds in the Southwest, is in command of the Mexican rebels across forces operating about Agua Prieta, including General Hilario Gallardo, the latter's dilatory tactics.

Because of his daring and recklessness "Red" Lopez is the idol of his men. With a little band of fewer than fifty men he has been playing havoc with Federal forces and has driven them in large numbers. With his band equipped with dynamite, Lopez has been blowing up railroad tracks, ranch houses and Federal barracks. Through the courage of Lopez the Federal forces were defeated and driven pell-mell with eleven killed, the insurrectos losing a settlement from the rear. Lopez got them into an arroyo where a force of regulars were ambushed, fifteen of whom wounded have since died, bringing the total up to fourteen.

BRINGING 40,000 TROPICAL OUTFITS FOR U. S. SOLDIERS

MANILA, March 15.—The army transport Sheridan sailed from here for the United States with the Thirteenth Cavalry. She also carried 40,000 khaki uniforms and other equipments, supplies for officers and clothes in service in the tropics. It is believed here that these supplies are intended for the United States troops now mobilized in Texas and California.

Most Common Skin Disease

A great medical authority says that eczema is the most important, most annoying and most common of all skin troubles; that one-third of all skin diseases are eczema in some form, and that proper treatment will always relieve and cure it. Sometimes it is called salt rheum, tetter, moist tetter and various other names. The best known treatment is to first stop the itching, and then proceed to heal up the sores. That is exactly what Cadum, the new remedy, does, and it acts so quickly that relief is felt as soon as it is applied. Try a 10-cent box, and if your trouble is eczema, Cadum will help you immediately. It is also good for redness, pimples, blotches, rash, scaly skin, roughness, chafings, acne, sores, ulcers, eruptions, hives, tetter, itch, herpes, psoriasis, ringworm, etc.

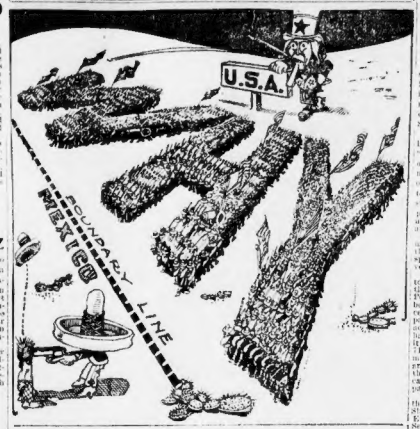
THE MEXICAN PUZZLE.



MEXICANS JAIL WOBURN MEN

Robert Benton and John Marrinan of Woburn have experienced thrills during the last week, according to letters received from 12 Paso, where the two are instructors in the military school. Captured by the Mexican revolutionists, they were for a time in danger. They crossed the Mexican border, cameras in hand, and were surrounded by a band of very active insurrectos.

Both were marched, under guard, to a cell in an old fortress. Their protests were unheeded and no replies were given to their demands for freedom. They were released without an explanation of the cause of their arrest.

DIAZ READY TO HEAD HIS ARMY

MEXICO CITY, March 15.—Alert and vigorous at eighty, President Porfirio Diaz of Mexico laughs at stories published in the United States that his health is failing and that he is on the verge of a breakdown.

"Look at me. Is not my appearance the best answer to that? But if you want assurance from my lips, then I say that I am in perfect health in every way. I never felt better in my life. I sleep well, eat well and have no disorder of any kind.

"I am up every morning between 5 and 6 o'clock, and every morning take a cold bath, then for about three hours I read the papers and amuse myself as I please, taking breakfast in the meantime and eating it with a hearty appetite.

"By 8:30 I am in my office at the National Palace at work, and I work until about 1 o'clock, when I go to luncheon. Then I walk for an hour or an hour and a half, usually to Chapultepec Park. At 3 I am back at work and work until about 6. Then I go home, have dinner and spend the evenings either reading or talking to friends. I go to bed about 11, sometimes later, and sleep like a boy until time to get up."

STATE MILITIA EXPECTS CALL

The 2,000 officers and men of the Massachusetts Volunteer Militia are being put into active preparation for a tour of duty in Texas. Adjutant General Pearson admits that the War Department may have an order at any moment calling the Bay State Militia into the field.

"The entire State militia can be mobilized within twenty-four hours," he said. "We may decide to hold our annual tour of duty in Texas." An company commanders have been quietly told to weed out the inefficient men in their commands, to recruit them up to the full service strength and to see that every bit of company property is ready for service. Commands without wagons have been told to arrange for them.

The annual inspections of the Bay State militia have been recently completed and the reports of the regular and militia inspecting officers show that the force has very few weak spots.

Inquiries from the War Department as to the readiness of the M. V. M. to take the field have been answered by General Pearson to the effect that the force could be mobilized inside of a day after the receipt of orders. The quartermaster's department has been busy and there is activity at the armory at South Framingham. Should the M. V. M. be ordered out it would respond with 470 officers and 1176 men. It is composed of five regiments of infantry, one regiment of coast artillery, three batteries field artillery, three troops of cavalry, two corps of cadets, and a naval brigade of eight companies.

The force is divided into two brigades, the First, comprising the Second and Sixth Infantry being commanded by Colonel Embury P. Clark of Springfield, and the Second, the Fifth, Eighth and Ninth Infantry, by General William A. Pew, of Gloucester.

MUNYON'S PAW PAW PILLS

Free at Nearest Drug Store.

Munyon's Paw Paw Pills are unlike all other laxatives or cathartics. They coax the liver into activity by gentle methods. They do not scour; they do not gripe; they do not weaken, but they do start all the secretions of the liver and stomach in a way that soon puts these organs in a healthy condition and corrects constipation. In my opinion constipation is responsible for most ailments. There are 29 feet of human bowels, which is really a sewer pipe. When this pipe becomes clogged the whole system becomes poisoned, causing biliousness, indigestion and impure blood, which often produce rheumatism and kidney ailments. No woman who suffers with constipation or any liver ailment can expect to have a clear complexion or enjoy good health.

If had my way I would prohibit the sale of nine-tenths of the cathartics that are now being sold for the reason that they soon destroy the lining of the stomach, setting up serious forms of indigestion, and so paralyze the bowels that they refuse to act unless forced by strong purgatives.

Munyon's Paw Paw Pills are a tonic to the stomach, liver and nerves. They invigorate instead of weaken; they enrich the blood instead of impoverish it; they enable the stomach to get all the nourishment from food that is put into it.

These pills contain no calomel, no dope; they are soothing, healing and stimulating. They school the bowels to act without physic.

MARGARET ANGLIN, WHO WILL PLAY IN MRS. HOWE'S DRAMA

MARGARET ANGLIN

'HIPPOLYTUS' CAST CHANGED

Owing to the fact that "The Fourth Estate" company has left town, Miss Margaret Anglin's managers have found it necessary to recast the part of Hippolytus in Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's drama, to be performed at a special matinee on Friday afternoon, March 24, at the Tremont Theatre. They have engaged Walter Hampden, who arrived in town on Monday and immediately began to rehearse with Miss Anglin. Mr. Hampden was last seen in this city in Clyde Fitch's final play, "The City." Perhaps his most notable achievement up to this time on the American stage was his superb performance of Manson in "The Servant in the House."

Wallace Goodrich of the Boston Opera House is arranging the music for "Hippolytus," and will select members of the orchestra under his direction at the Opera House. Miss Anglin will have no musicians in the orchestra pit and no interlude music. Such musical numbers as are necessary for the interpretation of the lyric passages of the drama will be performed by Mr. Goodrich's orchestra behind the scenes.

The costumes to be used by the artists, except Miss Anglin, were designed by Percy Anderson, a well-known London archaeologist. Miss Anglin's costumes have been designed by M. Sigismond Ivanowski, the Russian painter, who will paint a portrait of Miss Anglin in the character of Phaedra.

SOMERVILLE WOMAN EXPIRES IN CHAIR

Patrolman Moore of the Somerville police force was walking his beat to-day when he saw an aged woman sitting in her chair at the window of No. 32 Chestnut street. He knew she lived alone. He went into the house. The woman, who was Mrs. Ellen C. Jackson, seventy-five years old, had died of old age. She has sisters living in Newton and South Boston.

TEA ROOM WILL BAR SMOKING

Mrs. Margaret Purdy, head of the Assembly Tea Room Club rooms, today explained the object of the undertaking.

"The report that smoking will be allowed in the Assembly Tea Room Club is not true," said Mrs. Purdy. "These rooms will be a quiet resting place for ladies, who are without a chaperon, where they can come lunch and chat. We shall aim to keep every condition to an ideal one, and we hope to make the quarters more agreeable than the average hotel in Boston where ladies are obliged to rest in the waiting rooms after shopping and dining. No pains will be spared to make this whole building appeal to ladies who are passing through this city and want a homelike place to meet their city friends and to have meals together. But I do not see how this notion that we are going to allow smoking got abroad. Nothing has ever been said about it. It has not even been discussed.

"The whole venture will cost about $20,000. We shall occupy the whole building at No. 280 Hoylston street. Mrs. Warner De Lesdernier of New York city, who is backing the club financially, would never in the least countenance the project as described by the overheated imagination of the careless reporter in one Boston daily."

Mrs. Purdy has had a long experience in the British Tea Rooms, and she will have the aid in her efforts to conduct an ideal tea room of Mrs. McComb, wife of Rev. Dr. Samuel McComb; Mrs. Worcester, wife of Rev. Dr. Worcester; Mrs. F. F. Borrette, Mrs. Otis Norcross Jones, Mrs. F. O. Whitting and Mrs. Clarence Metcalf, Tufts College.

SOMERVILLE GIRL MARRIES WOOL MAN

The wedding of Miss Elizabeth C. Crocker, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Winsor L. Snow, and Walter M. Marston of Allston took place at the home of the bride's parents, No. 42 Curtis street, West Somerville. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Perley C. Grant, pastor of the West Somerville Congregational Church. The best man was Hiram Dexter of Brookline. The maid of honor was the bride's stepsister, Miss Ethel M. Snow. Miss Mary G. Marston, a sister of the groom, played the wedding march. The bride is a graduate of the Somerville English High School, class of '05. She is a member of the Dramcut and Charity Players. For four years she was employed at the State House. The groom is connected with a wool house on Summer street.

WOMEN FAINT IN CAR CRASH

One man was slightly injured and seventy-five other passengers were shaken up in a collision between two division 7 cars of the Boston Elevated at Dorchester street and Broadway, South Boston, shortly before 7 a. m. today. Three women on one of the cars fainted. Several men were cast to the floor, but were not hurt.

The injured man was B. Foley of No. 89 East Fourth street, South Boston. His right hand and fingers were cut by glass. Foley was treated at Carney Hospital.

The accident was caused by a City Point car jumping a crossover switch, crossing the tracks and ramming the forward end of a Harvard square via Dover street car. Both cars were jammed with passengers. The forward platforms of both were damaged and the windows shattered.

After an investigation it was explained that the motorman of the City Point car had carelessly failed to see that the switch was set wrong. The crossover was installed recently and is electrically operated. Water covered the switch at the time of the collision.

PHOTOGRAPHER HELD ON GIRLS' CHARGES

Edward Gagne of Athens street, South Boston, a photographer, sixty-four years old, with a studio at No. 28 Market street, Lynn, has been held under $2,000 bonds for the Grand Jury upon complaints by five young girls. Three of the girls were between fifteen and sixteen years old and the youngest said that she had been visiting Gagne's studio where she was thirteen years old. The Lynn police say they can produce other girls to testify.

YOUR SOUR, GASSY, UPSET STOMACH WILL FEEL FINE IN FIVE MINUTES.

You can eat anything your Stomach craves without fear of indigestion or Dyspepsia, or that your food will ferment or sour on your stomach if you will take a little Diapepsin occasionally.

Your meals will taste good, and anything you eat will be digested; nothing can ferment or turn into acid or poison or stomach gas, which causes Belching, Dizziness, a feeling of fullness after eating, Nausea, Indigestion (like a lump of lead in stomach), Biliousness, Heartburn, Water brash, Pain in stomach and intestines or other symptoms.

Headaches from the stomach are absolutely unknown to where this effective remedy is used. Diapepsin really does all the work of a healthy stomach. It digests your meals when your stomach can't. A single dose will digest all the food you eat and leave nothing to ferment or sour and upset the stomach.

Get a large 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from your druggist and start taking now, and in a little while you will actually brag about your healthy, strong Stomach, for you then can eat anything and everything you want without the slightest discomfort or misery, and every particle of impurity and Gas that is in your stomach and intestines is going to be carried away without the use of laxatives or any other assistance.

Should you at this moment be suffering from Indigestion or any stomach disorder, you can get relief within five minutes.

ROCHE ELECTED IN NORTH LOUTH

DUBLIN, March 15.—Augustine Roche, an Irish Nationalist, has been returned to Parliament from the North Louth district, according to returns filed here today.

This is the seat for which Timothy Healy, as a free lance, was defeated by Richard Hazleton, the Nationalist nominee, at the recent general election. Healy filed an election petition against Hazleton on the ground of intimidation of voters and the courts decided in his favor. This made necessary a new election.

Augustine Roche, who was defeated for Mayor of Cork City at the national election, was put forward for North Louth by the United Irish League. His return is a strong victory for the Nationalist organization. Roche is a man of independent means who has given for many years most generously to the national cause. He has twice filled the office of Lord Mayor of Cork and has also served as high sheriff. He is a bachelor. Racing is his hobby, next to home rule politics, and he has presented a splendid collection to the Crawford School of Art in Cork. He was one of Parnell's original election committee. He has many friends in Boston, among them Monsignor O'Callaghan, who was the guest of Mr. Roche last Summer in Ireland.

BUCKLEY BUSINESS AGENT.

Following a three-cornered contest at last night's meeting of Palmore Union No. 11, John H. Buckley was declared elected business agent of the union over John T. Calhoun, who defeated Mr. Buckley for the position last year.

RED SOX REGULARS OFF FOR LOS ANGELES

By MERTON E. SURKE.
American Correspondent with Red Sox on "Coast-to-Coast" Tour.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 15. After one more waltz at the San Francisco Country Club tonight the Red Sox Regulars conclude their stay here and take to the trail for Los Angeles, where they will remain for four days. On the trip down the San Joaquin Valley the Regulars will pass the Vernons, who are en route for Oakland, where they will also join the shoot, or more properly, the drive vacated by the Red team.

Merton E. Surke.

The boys will do bath to leave the gay rinks of Frisco for the quiet Southern City. The Red Sox got in right in the Quiet City of the Pacific also they just have to leave that dear Golden Gate and all that goes with it.

Donovan Stands Pat.

But schedules are schedules and Manager Donovan always stands pat.

Donovan gave Wykes fans a look at Spencer to-day, and the town went wild over him. He hit the ball for two singles, a three-bagger and a long home run over the centrefield fence. Oh, I guess he's nice. Fully a thousand people attended and fully a thousand are boasting Trio as the finest kid on earth. Funny how these ball stars do get popular.

The boys have heard that Christy Mathewson has invented a new curve, a slow double dip or a loop-the-loop or something like that which catchers can't get. But Hunt has them foiled. They can't reach Hunt's twists either. They can't hoist the Red Sox pitcher. He tried the Tigresses to 'em yesterday and Pape was put to bed before the game. He did well as the score shows.

Will Round Into Shape.

He will, however, round into shape. He has not pitched nearly as much as some and needs a little practice to get control.

To-day the Yanigans are slated for Bakersfield and Carrigan has taken them in hand and instructed them that they must win a game over in a while, or somebody will suspect them of not knowing how to play baseball like they can.

Bakersfield is one of those small towns that Boston baseball fans love to visit on the town and attend the game, and then they don't do it at least that's the card Modesto handed us and Bakersfield is under suspicion.

Among the arrived rooters at the Fairmont was Jim Bill Lange. Bill was some ball player in his day, but he is now principally concerned in touring up the map. Bill is a biggest touring car afficionado he has had the newspaper men and teams looking after him and shows them all the little choice spots on the Peninsula from the Cliff House to the Ferry Station, and then some.

Bill, of course, recalled that old story about himself. Four drummers were spending next the Boston ball park on a train en route for New York when there was a crash of glass and a baseball landed in the middle of the poker chips. "Tell her Bill Lange hit that," said one of them. "And the funny thing about it is that, says Bill, "I did, and made the longest home run on record, for that ball didn't stop until it reached Broadway."

Weather Seasonable.

Yanigans Meet Braves.

HANFORD, Cal., March 15.—On a sprinkling Spring afternoon Boston Red Sox second squad and a fine crowd here in a game with the Hanford Braves. Boston lined: Hanford: Moser and Dale; Yerkes pitching, Thoney, left field; Nunnemaker, catcher; Russell, second, and McHale, centre. Red Sox won, 9 to 8.

Moser was the star. He started pitching for the Boston ball nine and retired Hawley of Hanford in the sixth. He grabbed four flies. O'Brien finished the game for Boston and Dale heaved the last two innings for Hanford.

Boston scored three runs in the first inning after Perry fouled out and Myers fanned. Rigger got to first on an error. Engle hit on the chest and Yerkes brought both in with a hard double. Hollis sacrificed. Yerkes took third and they came in on an error.

In the third Engle hit to left and Yerkes scored him with a two-bagger. Yerkes got to third on a wild pitch and scored on an error.

In the fifth Perry scored Sheehan on a single. Rigger hit safely to right, scoring Moser, who had previously hit safely. Myers was called out for hitting third coming home.

In the sixth, after Myers had hit and stole second and third, Engle scored him with a single.

EVERYTHING IS DIFFERENT—AT GALE & KENT'S

When a man comes over to our tailor shop the first time, he is always impressed with the air of "something different" that pervades the entire shop. We don't go in much for near-copper mirrors—gilt floors—tiled ceilings or plush chandeliers. We have a great big tailor-shop, well-lighted and with more goods-in-the-piece on our shelves than any other tailor-shop in Boston.

Our workrooms are clean and airy—as sweet and wholesome as your dear old mother's kitchen on ironing day, back home. We make clothes down here—the best clothes that brains and a close study of styles and workmanship can put together. We guarantee them to fit, to be in style, and to wear in a satisfactory manner.

Wear includes holding shape and also holding color. We won't handle goods that fade. All our cloth is pre-shrunk. It costs us money to put out our clothes. We make a smaller net profit than any other tailor in the city, but a larger volume of business results, so things break about even in the long run.

Our prices for suits (or top coats) run $15 to $25—equal in every way to other tailor's $30 to $40 offerings.

Yes! we still make all our coats with "the-front-that-won't-break-down." This is also one of the "different" things at our shop.

FISTIC TREAT IN MANCHESTER

New Hampshire boxing fans will have a bottle treat served up to them at Manchester, to-night, when Young Queen City A. C. puts on its all-star show, which is made up of three ten-round bouts. The boxers are in fine shape and everything is in readiness to handle one of the largest crowds that ever turned out to attend a boxing show in Manchester.

Kid Silva of South Boston and Terry Martin of Philadelphia are to furnish the going in the feature bout. Both have prepared for the fight with great care, for they realize that the man who wins has got to fight at top speed in every moment that he is in the ring.

Silva has a strong favorite. His sensational work of late has caused him to be looked as a possibility for the welterweight championship. Frank Perron, Dave Doherty, Honey Mellody and Jimmy Moriarty, who have gone down to defeat to Silva, will testify to his ability as a fighter.

Dan Doherty says he isn't a bit doubtful about the result of his bout with Johnny Dooley. Jeff says that he will finish up the Silva's jaw that will bring home the bacon. Glover's friends believe that the South Boston boy has got too much cleverness and speed for Doherty. The boxers are of different types, and when they begin to mix there should be some fur flying.

The curtain raiser will be between Johnny Gallant of Chelsea and Nap Dufresne. The boys are evenly matched and the crowd will be disappointed if they fail to witness ten fast sessions between the ropes.

DEMETREL-GALVIN MATCH AT COLUMBIA

There will be but doings at the Columbia Theatre to-night, when Demetrel, the Greek heavyweight wrestling champion, whom Frank Gotch was unable to throw once in two games Jim Galvin, the fighting Irishman, on the mat. Galvin is known as a rough-house mixer on the line, but Demetrel will never lets an opportunity slip to punish an opponent, but he will find that the Greek likes that kind of work himself, and is at home at any old kind of a game. The men are very evenly matched as to size and weight, and should put up a most interesting and exciting match.

TENNEY LEADS BAND AGAINST YANIGANS

By R. W. LARDNER.
American Correspondent with the Rustlers on Augusta Tour.

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 15.—Just a week ago to-day the Rustlers arrived at Augusta and it is the opinion of every man on the squad that the week has been well spent. Up to yesterday the weather was ideal, and there is no reason to believe that yesterday's chilly replacements will be repented. But the cold air and slight mist failed to stop the Regular rehearsals and it will take a lot of worse weather than that to break up Manager Tenney's plans. The men were up early this morning ready for another hard day's labor. The usual morning batting and fielding practice was on the card with a game between the Regulars and Yanigans booked for the afternoon.

R. W. Lardner.

Augusta Game Saturday.

Manager Stoneham of the Augusta team informed Tenney that it would not be probable for his club to meet his team before Saturday, but this did not bother Fred much, as the present system is rapidly rounding the athletes into form.

The news that Pitcher Cecil Ferguson would not be with the Rustlers was heard with sorrow in camp, for Fergy is a great favorite with the other hurlers. Also, he is recognized as a good pitcher and the Rustlers realize that they can't probably be as strong without him as with him. Ferguson thinks his services are worth more than his contract calls for and he is reluctant to give up his job as salesman for a Boston plumber's supply house.

It must be a pretty good job he has if it can keep him away from the pastime which pays salaries that are not to be sneezed at. The bunch is still hoping he will change his mind and it is probable he will be unable to resist the call of the game when the real season opens.

Peter Collins, being informed that President Russell was fired to camp with the showing so far of his recruits, thought it proper to express William Hepburn's sentiments in verse. So he took his pencil in hand and dashed off the following masterpiece:

"Hurrah, hurrah," the magnate said, said he,
"Hurrah, hurrah," they all look good to me.
"Right now I'd like to bet we will finish one or two or three.
"While we are marching through Georgia."

Mr. Collins said the word "Marching" should be capitalized, explaining that it meant spending the month of March, not Wintering south. Oh, well, you know what it means.

The five athletes, Clark, Burke, Perdue, Collins and Rariden, who had their heads shaved, have been dubbed the "convicts," and they certainly do look the part. Burke is sorry he did it for it now, but his sorrow won't hasten the return of his hair, which was one of his chief beauties. Wilbur Goode desires to inform the public that his name is pronounced just plain "good," to rhyme with "would, if he could," "stood," "hood," etc. He has been called "goodey," "Goody," and lots of other things and has stood for the mispronunciations long enough. He says he can't see why it is so hard to get it right, for no one ever thinks of saying "Cook Clarkee," or "Bill Burkee." Says he in all those names is silent, as in hippopotamus. Speaking of a hippopotamus, Hub Perdue announces that he is good enough to pitch in the National League or the American, and that it will take some hard luck to keep him away from a regular berth on the staff.

Hub hasn't had a chance to exhibit any real pitching powers to date, but he surely possesses confidence, ginger and a sense of humor three times very considerable in a big league shinbaan.

Yesterday in game, which went to the Yanigans in six innings, 4 to 2, was marred by the fact that one pitcher worked the full route for the defeated Regulars. The pitcher was Buster Brown. He didn't exert himself a great deal, but was glad to learn that he felt no ill effects from his trial gallop. Hub Perdue pitched the next two innings for the Yanigans and Chick Evans finished it up. Hub was in a tight place in the first inning and a double play saved him a lot of trouble.

Started With Double.

Bill Collins led off with a double down the right foul line. Goode fouled to Pfeffer. Hersog gave Collins the hit-and-run signal, and lined straight into Young's hands. It was a pipe for Herzog to toss to Callahan before Collins could get back to second. Graham started as Evans in the third with a clean single to centre. Brown pulled a double into left. Peters singling at third. Collins fouled out to Rariden. Goode lifted a long fly to Keefe and Graham tallied. Brown started for third on the catch and came all the way home when Young's relay escaped Bailey. That wound up the attack of the Regulars.

Two were down in the Yanigans in the first trial when Butler rounded a single over Tegtmeier. Brown's wild peg to catch him napping allowed him to get to second whence he tallied on Pfeffer's smash to centre. Flaherty walked and collided scrambled in the second. Young's triple to left centre brought Pat in and Herzman counted on Rariden's fly to Goode. One down in the third. Hersog made a wild stave of Keefe's grounder. Pat hustling to second base. Butler's single sent him to third, Sweeny and Hersog invegled Butler into running on Pfeffer's fly to Miller and Arthur was doubled off first, but the double play was made as slowly that Keefe's run counted. Butler kept them guessing thereafter.

PACKY WHIPS MORAN FROM THE VERY START

By TAD.

NEW YORK, March 15.—McFarland is sure some caramel child. He met Owen Moran at the Fairmount Club last night and proved to us conclusively that he is the better man.

It wasn't a fight that stood the crowd on their heads with excitement. It wasn't a slam-bang one in any way you take it. As the man who sat next to the writer said, "It was like one of those days that clouds up every now and then but never rains."

The stock-yards lad was altogether too big for the Briton. He towered over him, was much bigger in every way and his strength told at every turn.

Packey, even, put it could be readily seen that Mr. Moran is the best man that ever faced the caramel cohort from the Windy City. Heretofore Packey had the softest time of his life trimming the Gotham geeks. He could walk from his corner, stab them with a left, push them back on their heels, and clout them on both ears without even fearing a return.

Things were soft for Packey around this camp, so soft in fact that he was looked upon as a white Joe Gans.

Little Moran, although at a great disadvantage, showed us last night just what a really clever fellow he is.

We never saw Packey McFarland miss the way he did with Moran. There were times when he missed uppercuts so hard that he almost hit himself. There were other times when he tore in after the little Englishman and found nothing but bare ropes which saved him from headlong plunges into the audience.

Swing at Nothing.

There were other times when Packey was so mixed up with himself and imaginary punches that he swung at nothing, just so he'd be moving in case anything came his way.

We're not handing Mr. Moran this large and beneficial bouquet on his aggressive work, however, for he was as wild as that old March hare with more than five dozen of his offerings, too. He missed Packey, strafed swings and stopped them, wound up himself and ducked when nothing came his way.

They were both extremely clever in feinting, and at one time or another made the other fellow look like the boob you hear about. For four rounds they shied this sort of stuff. First Patrick would pull a bluster that would draw some sighs, then Moran would toss over a wild one that would miss the mark five feet, and more heckles would arise from the throng. Two or three times the gallery started to whistle, and one fellow yelled, "When does the fight start?"

It wasn't that the boys were not trying; they were, but they knew so much that it made the thing look poor. The battles between Moran and Attell were never thrillers for the ringsiders.

We waged, however, while Packey, with that same aggressive style, kept after Moran. The latter, much shorter in reach, tried to get in under Packey's left and plant his right to the body, but it was hard work. He landed an overhand right early in the bout, drawing a tiny stream of blood from P.'s nose, but that was the only sign of blood up to the fifth round.

A Beauty Uppercut.

In the fifth Owen caught Packey a beautiful right-hand uppercut as the latter came in with his head down, and then a second later the Windy City man fetched with the same kind on his opponent.

Packey, although he landed but one out of every two he shot out, kept right after the Briton.

He pounded on the ribs with his right and then shot another uppercut to the face. Encouraged by this he tore after his man, swinging a wild right. Moran cleverly sidestepped and Packey bumped the ropes so hard just on the rebound he almost fell on this side. There was a great deal of clapping at this time and Moran was tickled to death. That's just about where the fight started.

In the eighth we saw that McFarland was the man. The good big man took the lead from the good little man and kept it to the end. He hooked Moran on the face with his left and immediately flipped the right upon the ohio sending Moran way across to the ropes.

The crowd, which was strong for the American, howled with glee as he rushed again and again with a punch and a shove and even through the ropes. It wasn't a knockdown.

Moran Never in Danger.

They were at it again in a second, but McFarland's uppercut was bothering the little fellow and he couldn't get away from it.

It was all McFarland's then, until the finish, with an occasional flash for Moran.

Packey would hold his long left out, push it against Moran's head, so that said block would bend backwards and then he'd shoot the right either to the chin or to the body.

Moran was never in danger of being knocked out, although he did say some that didn't seem to tickle a bit. He was too small entirely, for Packey's left lead seldom reached and his right looked to be about a foot long when he let it out against the left lead of McFarland. Both missed strong without a mark.

Before the main event, the great crowd was treated to an introduction feast, such men as F. Klaus, "One Round" Hogan, J. Marto, J. Coster, The Loney, Jeff Perry, Young Griffo and T. Murphy being shown them. In the preliminaries, Artie Edwards and Mickey Finnegan were referee general for the first round, taking everything in sight and then some. In the second he came out again, got the same dose for a minute and then suddenly drawing something from his sleeve, dropped over on Edward's jaw and the officers entered.

FRED LAKE OF SOMERVILLE, THE scout of the St. Louis Browns, and Mike Flinn of Natick, who holds a similar position for the New York Giants, are very chummy in the South, and they have the majority of the training grounds well covered already. Mike, the old owner of the Little Rock franchise in the Southern League, is pretty sure to have another team in the world but, while Fred seems pretty well satisfied to leave well enough alone. One of the interesting stories told by these oldtimers is Mike's tale of how John Dorcy, the late executive of the Boston Nationals, refused to pay $1,500 for the release of Jack Daubert, the crack first sacker of the Brooklyn Superbas, whom the player was in fine Southland, and that even after a hair dozen interviews, he could not persuade Manager Mathews to buy the release of Zack Wheat, the wonderful outfielder and clever batsman of the Brooklyn team from Mobile.

"FOR HE HIMSELF HATH SAID IT," Cy Young, the wonderful pitcher of the cleveland Naps, and who broke into major league baseball in 1890, admits without a blush that he will be forty-seven years old in April. It is a wonderful record that has been achieved by the old idol of Boston fans, and a testimony of not only competition with the record made by men of similar age in other branches of active sport. No man in the history of baseball has ever equalled Cy's wonderful record upon the pitcher's mound, and while older men have figured in baseball, riding to fame, in coaching and other sports, their achievements have been in no way comparable with the marvelous energy displayed as one of the premier pitchers of the country by the Farmer of Peoli. It is a record that will not be equalled or even approached in the history of baseball for many years to come, if ever.

MANAGER GEORGE V. BROWN OF the B. A. A. is very enthusiastic over the outlook for the New England boxing championships at Mechanics Hall on Saturday evening. "The entry that has been received, is not only of the biggest class, but exceptional," declares George, "and I predict the finest series of amateur bouts that have ever been held here to determine the award between the boys in the various classes for the premier honors among the amateurs of New England. The annual championships have quantity as well as quality, and may I suggest to our old-town members of the affiliated amateur athletic bodies, that they be promptly in their seats by 7 o'clock, if they desire to see the full program of bouts presented."

BROOKLINE HIGH NINE GETS BIG SET-BACK

Brookline High's baseball squad is hard hit by the failure of many of its candidates in the school room. INDOOR TRACK SEASON ENDS

The indoor track season will come to an end on Saturday, when the third annual Boston High School regimental meet will be held in the South Armory on Irvington street in the afternoon and the Interstate Y. M. C. A. scratch and handicap games in the evening at Newton.

Athletes from the eleven Boston High Schools will participate in the regimental and company competition in each, and the games are divided in the East Boston and they should run off with the same ease as they have in these games previously. Two years ago the Light and Park Hill won every first while last year they lost but two first places. This year three oldtimers count, the rankers for honors and the seniors, but it is not expected that this will hurt the chances of English High.

Meanix Is Helped.

The dropped event will be held in the English High gymnasium to morrow afternoon. This arrangement will be a big help to several of the boys who are to take part if they are entered in this event. Bill Meanix of English will be greatly helped by this plan for he will be built to the spring and hurdles.

English High is minus many of its crack five first. Captain Meanix, Howe, Hurley and Hewick make up a great array that is the 60-yard sprint and the only likely contestant to have any show with her Leet of the Boston Latin School. Leet won third place in the short dash in the 'Hi interscholastic games in Mechanics Building, and he will give the English boys the greatest kind of a race. George Read of English should win the 600-yard dash and William Ferguson also of English, should win the half-yard run. Captain Meanix should win the shotput and the hurdles, but Connolly of English will have a hard time in the high jump.

Good for Seconds.

Mechanic Arts, High School of Commerce, Boston Latin and the West Roxbury High Schools have several good men and should break in for several second and third places, but they have not as well balanced a team as the English High and are not expected to make a big run for the high honors.

The competition in the junior and intermediate events will have a little to do with the winning of the meet, as the boys from the outside schools such as Charlestown, East Boston and Roxbury are likely to slow themselves and start a little trouble among the bigger schools.

When Juliet Plays Jilt

By DOROTHY DIX.

A MAN is suing a girl who filled him for $10,000 for time lost in courting her.

Shades of Romeo! Think of a lover with a time card in his hand, punching up the hours and minutes that he spent in murmuring sweet nothings into a shell like ear, and holding her hands in his lily-white hand, and then assessing the value of those same entrancing moments in cold, hard cash!

There are things in this world so joyous that they are their own reward, and love making heads this list. It is to demand a monetary consideration for the time consumed in a kiss is surely gilding the lily and painting the rose with a vermilion pencil.

Nevertheless this unusual suit raises an interesting question. Is the time a man spends in courting a woman—when he doesn't get her—lost time?

I trow not. Of course we have a poet's declaration: "My only books were women's looks, and FOLLY'S all they've taught me." But this was the pessimistic view of the gentleman, doubtless recovering from the pangs of unrequited love.

It's a Liberal Education.

As a matter of fact, to love a woman is a liberal education in itself, and it count one is equal to a course at college. This is without reference to the sentiments of the lady; for chief among woman who have refused more than are these women who have refused to marry them.

To begin with, courtship is the first gift to civilization with man. If there were no women in the world, man would still be going about clothed in blankets, and with the aboriginal growth of hair upon their faces. The first thing a little boy voluntarily washes behind his ears marks the beginning of his first wooing.

A man never cares how he looks until he sees himself in the mirror in some woman's eyes; and, when he does, he begins to get busy with the barber and tailor and haberdasher, and assume what he thinks is a dashing and killing air.

It is the courtship of woman that has refined man up from the savage to the elegant creature we see depicted in the clothing advertisements in the fronts of the magazines; and to say that this time has been wasted is to give the double cross to human progress.

Gives Him a Line on Himself

The time spent in courtship is a season of great profit to a man, because it gives him the first real line he has ever had on himself. It is a period of self-revelation that leaves him gasping with astonishment.

Up to that time, he has supposed himself to be a strong, self-contained character, above the ordinary weaknesses of mankind. He has had a great opinion of his own powers, and looked on those brothers who were easily influenced. In his own mind he has decided never to marry. Or, if he did marry, he would marry some perfectly suitable young woman who was healthy, intelligent domestic and possessed of a neat fortune of her own.

Then, one day, a silly, frivolous, pink and white little ange of a girl, with big violet eyes crossed his path, and he found himself not feeling in the least like having every single thing that he had always sworn he never would do. She was precisely the kind of a girl that he had thought any man an idiot to marry, and yet the only thing in the world that he felt was worth while was to induce her to say "Yes" to him.

He, the strong, became her slave. He, the dignified, fetched and carried like a dog for her. He, the philosophical, was transported to Heaven by her smile and cast down into the pit by her neglect.

Oh, it's an illuminating experience to a man to court a woman!

He never knows how many forty-seven varieties of a fool he can be until he tries it. It's time well spent for any man to get this information, believe me.

The time a man spends in courtship is not wasted, because it takes it, and not the gentle hand of a woman to trim off the overweening conceit and vanity of a young one and turn him into a nice, decent, lovable man.

Nothing else on earth takes the wind out of the sails of a cheaty young lord of creation—with more than half a chance—and throw the handkerchief and all the women in the vicinity will be scrambling and baby quilting to get it—like having some woman play him on the line for the time, amusement as long as she likes, and then—when she's tired of the game—drop him down with a cold thud. It's a most entertaining experience that does many a man good as long as he lives.

The time a man spends in courtship is not wasted, because it turns him into a philosopher whether he gets her or misses her; for there is no such illustration of the fleeting nature of human desires as to see the woman you once wanted to marry ten years afterwards, unless it is to be married to her yourself.

The man who has been through the college of courtship has taken his degree and is entitled to write M. A., Ph. D., LL. D. after his name, for he has qualified as a master of arts, a philosopher, and as an expert in the laws that rule the court of love.

BEAUTY HINTS

Superfluous Hair

...tell me if there is any way to permanently remove superfluous hair from the face and arms? I have tried many things, but they have only irritated. I have been told that electricity is the only way, but I dislike the idea of using it. Can you tell me of any other method? I would give me your advice.

CHARLOTTE R.

You are wise to avoid the electric needle. It is a dangerous thing to use, and in the long run often leaves worse scars. I have tried and proved all these methods that it is safe to employ, and the assurance that to suffer the pain of the electric needle. I have used a preparation called dedilatories, which are worse than useless because they irritate the hair to grow coarser and in greater force.

Recently, however, I have received some enthusiastic and reliable reports about a most wonderful discovery that actually does remove superfluous hair forever. I have written to a friend of mine who received a complimentary bottle of it, and she would gladly furnish it to any gentleman, without charge, to anyone who would be kind enough to write her.

If you will write to Mrs. Osgood, 113 E. Old St., Providence, R. I., enclosing a two-cent stamp for reply and mentioning my advice, she will send you quite free of all cost, complete information by which you can immediately and permanently rid of all trace of the blemish.

The Family Tempest and How It Was Quickly Quelled

MRS. JOYCE had been suffering all day with one of her severe headaches.

Also a neighbor had called and had taken three hours to tell that she had seen another neighbor's husband walking with a blonde person that she just knew must be his stenographer. Also Johnnie had fallen through the ice, and in her nervous state in getting him to bed she had spilled a cup of tea on her best down quilt.

Taking everything into account, she felt that she had had a pretty bad day, but she bore patiently all through dinner Joyce's rapid-fire conversation and his bubbling good humor.

It was only when the meal was over and her husband whistled the chorus of "Yip-I-Addy" five times in five different keys, each one shrillier than the one before, that she raised her hands and said, "Louis, please stop that awful noise."

"Noise?" ejaculated Joyce, surprised. "Why, my dear, don't you feel well?"

"No, I don't; but a person might feel well and still not care for your whistling."

"What is it—another of your beastly headaches? It must be pretty bad. I used to be called a dog whistler."

"Then you must have been raised in a very untruthful community."

"Now I know your headache must be awful. You are looking mighty mean, too."

How the Storm Begun

"Go afraid and abuse me as much as you please. I suppose I can stand it." Mrs. Joyce was beginning to feel very badly treated.

Joyce looked at his wife in astonishment. Then he tried again. "What is the matter? Is your mother coming?"

"Maude Joyce!"

Mrs. Joyce gazed in horror for a minute at his back as he stooped over the trunk.

Determined to Go

There was silence as she fastened on her hat and arranged her veil with elaborate care. Then Joyce came up from the depths of the trunk to ask for in a politely interested tone: "Shall I put the bath robe in?"

It was a robe that Mrs. Joyce had given her husband for a Christmas present and, as it was soft and warm, he often wrapped her in it. So, because his words hurt so much, she replied icily: "By all means, I couldn't think of leaving that."

"And the brown slippers?" They were another present of hers. Joyce was enjoying himself hugely.

"No, you may keep the slippers; they're much too large for any relative of mine." Mrs. Joyce had hard work to answer at all, and it was only by employing sharp words that she maintained even a semblance of composure.

Joyce grinned expansively into the trunk. Then he turned and said serlously: "Well, she's packed and I'll ship her in the morning."

He went over and helped his wife put on her coat and followed her mechanically down the stairs and to the door.

He had felt all along that his wife did not really mean to go, but now, as she put her hand on the knob, he became apprehensive.

As she opened the door and was about to pass out he felt a quick pain at his heart that took his breath for a minute. For it dawned on him in a flash that he had been cruel. His wife had been sick and he had teased and angered her instead of sympathizing with her.

In an instant he was all contrition. He reached out and took the door knob from her fingers and, drawing her inside closed the door.

Mrs. Joyce looked into his eyes and what she saw there broke down her pride and dignity. Good, genial, Southern—she never could tell just how—she was in his arms, her head on his shoulder, crying unrestrainedly, while he was soothing and petting her in his tenderest way.

When the worst of the storm had passed, she looked up and said: "Oh, Louis, you didn't care a bit about my going, and it hurt so!"

"Why, you little goose," he replied "I was scared stiff, but I was wearing my poker face."

Then Mrs. Joyce buried her nose in his neck and said in a little shamed voice: "You've got the smallest feet of any man I know."

The Mystery of the "Villa Rose"

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written. By A. E. W. Mason. Copyright, 1909, 1910, by A. E. W. Mason

"LISTEN, mademoiselle, to what she says," said the judge, and he read out to Celia an extract or two from Hamel's report of his first interview with Helene Vanquier in her bedroom at the Villa Rose.

"You hear what she says, Mme. Dauvray would have sensed all day, but Mlle. Celia pointed out that she was left exhausted at the end of them. But Mlle. Celia was of an address." And again, speaking of Mme. Dauvray's queer crisis that the spirit of Mme. de Montespan should be called up, Helene Vanquier says: 'She was never gratified. Always she hoped. Always she waited. Always she was hurt with the hope.

"She would not spoil her nice affairs by making these treats too common. Thus she attributes your reluctance to multiply your experiments to a desire to make the most profit possible out of your wares, like a good business woman."

"It is not true, monsieur," cried Celia earnestly. "I tried to stop the seances because now for the first time I recognized that I had been playing with a dangerous thing. It was a revelation to me. I did not know what to do. Mme. Dauvray would promise me everything, give me everything, if only I would consent when I refused. I was terribly frightened of what would happen. I did not know what to do. I thought I knew it was not good for her that she should suffer so much excitement. No, I did not know what to do. And so we all moved to Aix."

And there she met Harry Wethermill on the second day after her arrival, and presently straightway for the first time to fall in love. To Celia it seemed that at last that had happened for which she had so longed. She began really to live as she had never lived life at this time. The day, until she met Harry Wethermill, was one flash of joyous expectation; the hours when they were together a time of concentrated which thrilled with some chance meeting of the hands into an exquisite happiness. Mme. Dauvray understood quickly what was the matter, and laughed at her affectionately.

"Celie, my dear," she said, "your friend, M. Wethermill—Arry, is it not? See, I pronounce your tongue—will not be as comfortable as the shoe, fat, bourgeois gentleman I meant to find for you. But, since you are young, naturally you want storms. And there will be storms, Celie," she concluded, with a laugh.

Celia blushed.

"I suppose there will," she said, regretfully. There were indeed, moments when she was frightened of Harry Wethermill, but frightened with a delicious thrill of knowledge that he was only stern because he cared so much.

In Love with Wethermill

But in a day or two there began to intrude upon her happiness a stinging dissatisfaction with her past life. At times she fell into melancholy, comparing her career with that of the man who loved her. At times she came near to an extreme irritation with Helene Vanquier. Her lover was in her thoughts. As she put it herself:

"I wanted always to look my best, and always to be very good."

Good in the essentials of life, that is to be understood. She had lived in a lax world. She was not particularly troubled by the character of her associates; she was untouched by them; she liked her fling at the baccarat tables. These were details, and did not distress her. Love had not turned her into a Puritan. But certain recollections plagued her soul.

The visit to the restaurant at Montmartre for instance, and the seances. Of these indeed, she thought to have made an end. There were the baccarat rooms, the beauty of the town and the neighborhood to distract Mme. Dauvray. Celia kept her thoughts away from seances. There was no seance as yet held in the Villa Rose. And there would have been none but for Helene Vanquier.

One evening, however, as Harry Wethermill walked down from the Carcle to the Villa des Fleurs, a woman's voice spoke to him from behind.

"Monsieur!"

He turned and saw Mme. Dauvray's maid. He stopped under a street lamp, and said:

"Well, what can I do for you?"

The woman hesitated.

"I hope monsieur will pardon me," she said humbly. "I am committing a great impertinence. But I think monsieur is not very kind to Mlle. Celie."

Wethermill started at her.

"What on earth do you mean?" he asked angrily.

Helene Vanquier looked him quietly in the face.

"It is plain, monsieur, that Mlle. Celie loves monsieur. Monsieur, has led her on to love him. But it is also plain to a woman with quick eyes that monsieur himself cares no more for mademoiselle than for the button on his coat. It is not very kind to spoil the happiness of a young and pretty girl, monsieur."

Nothing could have been more respectful than the manner in which these words were uttered. Wethermill was taken in by it. He protested earnestly, fearing lest the maid should become an enemy.

"Helena, it is not true that I am play ing with Mlle. Celie. Why should I not care for her?"

Helene Vanquier shrugged her shoulders. The question needed no answer.

"Why should I seek her so often if I did not care?"

And to this question Helene Vanquier smiled—a quiet, slow, confidential smile. "What does monsieur want of Mme. Dauvray?" she asked. And the question was her answer.

Wethermill stood silent. Then he said abruptly:

"Nothing, of course; nothing." And he walked away.

But the gentle remained on Helene Vanquier's face. What did they all want of Mme. Dauvray? She knew very well. It was not what she herself wanted—with other things. It was money—always money. Wethermill was not the first to seek the good graces of Mme. Dauvray through her pretty companion. Helene Vanquier went home. She was not discontented with her conversation.

Wethermill had paused long enough before he denied the suggestion of her words. She approached him a few days later a second time and more openly. She was shopping in the Rue du Casino when he passed her. He stopped of his own accord and spoke to her. Helene Vanquier kept a grave and respectful face. But there was a pulse of joy at her heart. He was coming to her hand.

The Bargain.

"Monsieur," she said, "you do not go the right way." And again her strange smile illuminated her face. "Mlle. Celie sets a guard about Mme. Dauvray. She will not give to people the opportunity to fail anything generous."

"Oh," said Wethermill slowly. "Is that so?" And he turned and walked by Helene Vanquier's side.

"Never speak of Mme. Dauvray's wealth, monsieur, if you would keep the favor of Mlle. Celie. She is young, but she knows her world."

"I have not spoken of money to her," replied Wethermill; and then he burst out laughing. "But why should you think that I—I, of all men—want money?" he asked.

And Helene answered him again enigmatically.

"If I am wrong, monsieur, I am sorry, but you can help me, too," she said, in her submissive voice. And she passed on, leaving Wethermill rooted to the ground.

It was a bargain she proposed—the impertinence of it! It was a bargain she proposed—the value of it! In that shape ran Harry Wethermill's thoughts.

He was in desperate straits, though to the world's eye he was a man of wealth. A gambler, with no expensive tastes, he had been always in need of money. The rights to his patent he had mortgaged long ago. He was not an idler; he was no sham; he fostered as a great man on an ignorant public. He had really some touch of genius, and he cultivated it assiduously. But the harder he worked, the greater was his need of money and extravagance. Gifted with good looks and a charm of manner, he was popular alike in the great world and the world of Bohemia. He kept and wanted to keep a foot in each.

How Helene Knew

That he was in desperate straits now, probably Helene Vanquier alone in Aix had recognized. She had drawn her inference from one simple fact. Wethermill asked her at a later time when they were better acquainted how she had guessed his need.

"Monsieur," she replied, "you were in Aix without a valet, and it seemed to me that you were of that class of men who would never move without a valet so long as there was money to pay his wages. That was my first thought. Then when I saw you pursue your friendship with Mlle. Celie—you, who so clearly to my eyes did not love her—I felt sure."

On the next occasion that the two met it was again Harry Wethermill who sought Helene Vanquier. He talked for a minute or two upon indifferent subjects, and then he said quickly:

"I suppose Mme. Dauvray is very rich?"

"She has a great fortune in jewels," said Helene Vanquier.

Wethermill started. He was agitated that evening, the woman saw. His hands shook, his face twitched. Clearly he was hard put to it. For he seldom betrayed himself. She thought it time to strike.

"Jewels which she keeps in the safe in her bedroom," she added.

"Then why don't you——" he began, and stopped.

"I said that I, too, needed help," replied Helene without a ruffle of her composure.

It was 8 o'clock at night. Helene Vanquier had come down to the Casino with a wrap for Mme. Dauvray. The two people were walking down the little street of which the Casino blocks the end. And it happened that an attendant at the Casino, named Alphonse Ruel, passed them, recognized them both and—smiled to himself with some amusement. What was Wethermill doing in company with Mme. Dauvray's maid? Ruel had no doubt.

Ruel had seen Wethermill often enough these recent days with Mme. Dauvray's pretty companion. Ruel had all a Frenchman's sympathy with lovers. He wished them well, those two young and attractive people, and hoped that the maid would help their plans.

But as he passed he caught a sentence spoken suddenly by Wethermill.

"Well, it is true; I must have money."

And the agitated voice and words remained fixed in his memory. He heard, too, a warning "Hush!" from the maid. Then they passed out of his hearing. But he turned and saw that Wethermill was talking volubly. What Harry Wethermill was saying he was saying in a foolish burst of confidence.

"You have guessed it, Helene—you alone." He had mortgaged his patent twice over—once in France, once in England—and the second time had been a month ago. He had received a large sum down, which went to pay his pressing creditors. He had hoped to pay the sum back from a new invention.

"But, Helene, I tell you," he said, "I have a conscience." And when she smiled he explained, "Oh, not what the priests would call a conscience; that I know. But none the less, I have a conscience—a conscience about the things which really matter, at all events to me. There is a flaw in that new invention. It can be improved; I know that. But as yet I do not see how, and—I cannot let it go imperfect when I know it's imperfect, when I know that it can be improved, when I am sure that I shall sooner or later hit upon the needed improvement. That is what I mean when I say I have a conscience."

Harry in Hard Straits

Helene Vanquier smiled indulgently. Men were queer fish. Things which were really of no account troubled and perplexed them and gave them sleepless nights. But it was not for her to object, since it was one of these queer anomalies which was giving her her chance.

"And the people are finding out that you have sold your rights twice over," she said sympathetically. "That is a pity, monsieur."

"They know," he answered; "those in England know."

"And they are very angry?"

Little Things of Love

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

IT is both humiliating and disconcerting to think on how small a thing love sometimes hinges, and to what an amazing extent one's ardor may be increased or repelled by some trival mannerism or personality.

One of the most pathetic cases I know is that of a good, kindly, wholesome man who loves a dainty little woman with all his honest heart. For over two years she has been trying to bring herself to the point of marrying him; but she can't.

Why? Because he is stout and florid and a little bald. Because, as she whimsically says, when he stands up straight and looks down "he doesn't see the tops of his shoes but the buttons on his vest."

He is most chivalrous, kind generous, and kind. He could give her a comfortable home and would cherish and care for her tenderly.

She knows all that, and yet I think she is nursing a secret fancy for a tall, slim, dark-eyed youth without half his character or his worth, and who has no desire whatever to marry her.

Makes Her Loathe Him.

I know a woman who perhaps never really loved her husband, but who, now, has come to loathe him for the very way he swings his arms and holds his shoulders as he walks; and for a harmless but unalluding little habit of rubbing the end of his nose with his finger when he is thoughtful.

Another woman told me that if she had dined often enough with her husband before they were married they never would have been.

He doesn't eat with his knife or sop up gravy with his bread. He observes all the ordinary rules of etiquette. But it is the way he moves his lips. There is something about his mouth, when he eats which she says makes her want to scream.

And, just as it is a trivial mannerism that makes a woman shudder away from a man, so it may be an equally trivial mannerism that fascinates her.

Ask any woman who is in love to tell you any of the little personal traits of the man she loves, and she will mention countless things that, to any one else, would seem absurdly insignificant, but which she dreams about by the hour.

It may be the way he holds his cigar, or carries his cane, or a trick of throwing back his head, or running his hand through his hair, or the grace with which he lounges in a chair or leans against a mantelpiece.

The Tone of His Voice.

Or perhaps it is a tone of voice, the tender, protecting way he says "little girl" or "Kitten" or "sweetheart." One young woman told me that just his voice over the telephone, the deep, rich note of his "Hello!" would alone have almost won her love.

Women are such foolish, impressionable, illogical creatures that the whys and wherefores of their loving are indeed "past understanding."

Place Cards For Easter Weddings

A SMALL slipper is made of white pasteboard covered with a white satin rosette of chiffon held by a gilt buckle. The name is written across the side of the slipper, starting near the toe.

A large slipper can be made in the same way and filled with moss and short-stemmed pink rosebuds.

A heart-shaped frame is made of embossed gilt paper with a strip at back to stand. In the frame can be a fancy picture of a bride. Where the hostess is artistic each of these brides is different, wearing the costume of some well-known period.

This same period idea can be carried out by making the brides as paper dolls and fitting them over with a pasteboard card.

For a dinner the groom of the same period should be given to the girl, his mate being for her dinner partner.

A simple card is made from an oblong strip of white water color paper with two over-lapped pink hearts, a size or two taller than the card in white, pasted in the middle, and these tiny hearts, above each other, on each end.

Even simpler is a good-sized pink heart on a similar piece covered in white lace. The upper lobes of the heart may have a leaf design in raised gold.

Another oblong card five and a half by two and three-quarters inches has a half-wreath of small pink or Dresden roses festooned from the upper left-hand corner to beyond the middle of the card, and crossing it should be a wedding bell in gilt paint, tilted to show the clapper, and with a small bow of pale green gauze ribbon running through the bell.

A card to hang over the glasses measures three and a half by an inch and a half, with a gilt-edged top in color to match the decoration. On this is written the name of the guest, and from the centre rises a colored candle such as is used on birthday cakes. The larger these candles are the longer they will burn during the luncheon.

Desperate Desmond

I'LL SEE FROM HIS SENTENCE IN THIS MINE, SIR!
NOW DESMOND, YOU HAVE TO SUFFER FOR YOUR MANY CRIMES AGAINST US!
CURSES! WELL FOIL YOU ALL YET!
THE CUR!
DYNAMITE
I'LL NOT WORK IN THIS MINE! I'D RATHER DIE MAN!
OH LOVELY!
WHAT A BEAUTIFUL SPECIMEN OF OSTRICH! WHAT FINE PLUMES FOR A HAT!
SO HEROIC OF YOU TO PLUCK ONE OF THEM FOR ME, CLAUDE!
THIS TUNNEL RUNS UNDER THE OSTRICH FARM AND ROSAMOND ARE SURE TO BE THERE, WATCH THE EXPLOSION!
DYNAMITE
WHOA! BLACK! LET US ESCAPE! THE OSTRICH WILL KILL US!
IN THE NICK OF TIME! I'M SURE IT WAS DESMOND AS DEVON SAY IT WAS!

Here we see Mr. D. Desmond about to go to work in the mines of Australia, not because he likes the work, but because the long arm of the Law has got him by the neck. Claude and Rosamond are on hand to see him pay the penalty for his long career of crime. It's a sight worth travelling many miles to see.

The only trouble is that the authorities in charge of the mine are not used to the ways of Desmond's confreres, and they do watch him so closely as they might. If they had know him better they would be able to pick up a few of the ostrich feathers. They do say they're going to be worn quite a lot this season.

Now that their arch enemy is safely out of the way, as they suppose, Claude and Rosamond decided to have a look at an ostrich farm before they return to their native land. Rosamond thinks she may be able to pick up a few of the ostrich feathers. They do say they're going to be worn quite a lot this season.

Desperate Desmond knows that Rosamond will be sure to visit the ostrich farm, and he also knows that part of the mine is directly under the farm. Such being the case, you can readily imagine what the villain plans to do. Yes, you guessed right the very first time, then, you looked at the picture.

Claude is just about to swipe a feather from the ostrich, when the bird gets wise to him and kicks a large ripe egg in the general direction of his physiognomy. Claude decides not to linger any longer in the vicinity, and it's mighty lucky for him that he so decides. Also it's lucky that he sets on his decision without delay.

As you see, the lovers did not get away from there a moment too soon. That end of dynamite exploded under the very spot on which they were standing, and it was some explosion, too, believe us. Desmond thinks they are done for, but he'll know better to-morrow, provided he succeeds in digging himself out of the debris.

The Road of No Returning

By WINIFRED BLACK

"DEAR WINIFRED BLACK:

"I am a stenographer getting forty dollars a month, give twenty to mother. I have a happy home, good brothers and sisters, and there's a young man who wants to marry me. I am young, pretty clothes and gay times, and I want to go into a life where I know I can get them.

"I know several girls who live like that, and I think that I would be happier if I were like them. What ought I to do—marry the young man and pretend to be happy or follow my own inclination?

"LITTLE DESPONDENT."

YES. It is a real letter. Yes, it came in the mail this very day.

It was a good deal longer than this. It told about the home and the mother at some length and about the poor young man who wants to marry the girl, and about the girls she knows who wear pretty clothes and go to the theatre and to the races and to restaurants, and have a hair dresser for their hair and a manicure for their hands and poodle dogs to carry around, and lovely thumb rings and hobble skirts and everything else that makes life lovely and proud and full of joy—in the opinion of the young person who signs herself "Little Despondent."

What should you do, you little, shallow-pated, curse-dared, stupid, vain, indolent creature, you? Why, go with your friends of the thumb rings and the poodle dogs, for goodness sake. That's where you belong. Go and laugh and dance and drink of the empty-headed. Stroll the streets, decked out like a parrot from Asia. Flaunt your foolish finery in the eyes of decent women and modest girls, and imagine, poor little goose, that they are envying you. Wander from place to place, homeless, friendless. Sleep in the clean, beautiful daytime and stay up all night in the garish white light of the inferno they call the gay district. Give up real love, give up home, give up your own self-respect, your own honest pride, your own decent self-support, and be one of the under world's miserable, hunted, preyed-upon creatures.

Die alone in a charity hospital and be buried in the Potters Field, without a friend to shed a tear at your grave—poor, empty-souled, shrivelled-hearted being that you are—do anything rather than drag a decent man into a life with such as you.

Go to the life you think you would love, but remember that it is a road that runs just one way—you can never come back along that path.

When you choose you choose for good and all. And, if I were you, I'd ask these other girls you know what they really think about it all—ask them some day when they are alone and tired, and when the gay clothes are dragged, and when the laughter has turned into a wail of despair. Perhaps they'd change your mind about the "gay" life then.

Try it and see.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

MUST LEARN SELF-CONTROL

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

As I am about to be married, I would like some of your advice.

When I am in my friend's company my heart is filled with affection, sympathy, love and kindness for her, but when I am away from her I think more of some petty disagreements which we have had, and which always seem to anger me.

As I am unfortunate enough to possess an irritable disposition, I sometimes scathe it that I am always glad to see her. But what I wish to know is this:

Do you think I love her enough to marry her? And don't you think that after we are married I may feel differently?

A. B. C.

I THINK you do love her, but if your love is going to be of the fault finding, critical kind, it will not bring much happiness to her. Try and make up your mind to dwell on her good qualities instead of harping on disagreeable incidents.

If you cannot conquer this habit I think it would be unwise to marry. I am sure, however, that you can conquer it if you really try.

BETTER DROP IT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a girl of nineteen and am very much in love with a young man two years my senior. I have known him for four years, and he treated me very well and showed me in different ways that he cared for me.

One day I asked him what were his intentions, and he answered that he wanted to be engaged, but that he had a younger sister and, therefore, his mother was opposed to the engagement. I told him I had waited long enough, but he did not seem to care, and always postponed the argument.

I grew very impatient and spoke to him seriously about it, but he took the matter up in a very cold manner and said he could not help it. Therefore I told him never to calre my name again.

Now, Miss Fairfax, do you think I was wrong in doing so?

THE wisest thing you can do is to put an end to the friendship. You should not have asked him his intentions; he could not very well have answered other wise than he did. He has then your time when he perhaps had no serious intentions, and that was very wrong of him. The best thing to do now is quietly drop the whole matter. If he has any real love for you he will seek you; have no doubt of that.

Daysey Mayme a Critic

She Tackles a New Job in the Hope of Raising the Standard of Modern Writing

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE

WHEN Daysey Mayme Appleton reads a book, she puts up innumerable sign boards, warnings and danger signals for the next person who travels through its pages, and these sign boards, warnings and danger signals consist of notations on the margin, the underscoring of passages, and sometimes of a whole paragraph.

"The next traveler through this book will find a master mind has marked all the mountain peaks of thought, has scaled every cliff of uplift and put up a Danger Sign over every quagmire of depression and unrest," said Daysey Mayme.

"Ah me, 'twas ever thus." "Alas the unfilling heart of woman!" "The perdity of man!" "I weep with you here!" "How tender and sweet!" So one can be sad and keep this in his heart," she's written on the margins of pages Daysey Mayme has passed through, and recently she found the margins of pages too limiting for the thoughts that came surging from her brain, and sought a position as a book critic.

Following are some of the first day's criticisms submitted by Daysey Mayme:

"Modern writers cling to the bad styles of expression of early-day writers. I note in a late novel that the heroine has the swan like neck admired by Byron. This was not the best form at that time, and is unendurable in these days when a surgical tool is within the reach of most lumenes."

"Heroines still draw themselves up to their full height." Bad. Sounds as if the human form is made to open out like a jackknife.

"The stolen kiss is rated too high in the books. The discovery was made years ago by those who analyze their emotions, that the stolen kiss tastes of salt and teath and face powder, and is overrated."

"The book here continues to gather the book from the shelf in his arms. If we speak properly when we 'gather' clothes off a wash line, or 'gather' cucumbers off a boat, then the word is used improperly when it is said: 'He gathered her to his arms.'"

Day's Best Story

MARIE DRESSLER is as famous for her epigrams as she is for her generosity. An actor was reading one of her justly famous bits of repartee.

Miss Dressler was inviting her friends to a birthday party.

"There'll be a birthday cake I suppose?" some one remarked.

"Yes, there'll be a cake, never fear," was the reply.

"And candles, of course?" went on the alleged wit.

"Candles!" said Miss Dressler, "this is to be a birthday party, not a torchlight procession."

The Mystery of a Dancer Who Enthralled a Metropolis

The House With No Address

A Story of Love and Tragedy by R. Nesbit

Copyright by Doubleday, Page & Company

Synopsis of Preceding Instalments

Edward Templar, the young scion of a rich old English family, is about to go to the Boer war, but before he leaves England he decides to visit his uncle and aunt at their country house, the Reka Dorn, on the edge of the New Forest, to say farewell.

Before entering the house he plans to spend an hour of solitude in the forest, where he had passed pleasant moments in boyhood. As he lies on the sward he hears the notes of a pipe and crowds along through the undergrowth in ascertain what strange musician is about in the depths of the forest. The music is unusually good.

Presently, from his place of concealment, he sees an open glade golden in the sunlight—a veritable sylvan theatre. At one side on a fallen sapling sits a boy, barefooted, barecheested, blowing at a gleaming pipe.

To the music of the strange Pan danced a nymph. It was the dance of the wild-wood nymph and the music was the music of the Valse de Fleurs. The flute of Pan was a penny whistle.

The dancer's bare, brown arms waved and wove the air into circles; her ankles, brown, too, and the bare feet touched the mossy turf in swift, soft caress.

The music ceased.

From her place of concealment behind the copse, the girl dancer calls out to Pan that there is "a man hiding in the underbrush."

"I don't see anyone," says the boy looking vainly around.

Sandra, the girl, tells him she can't see the man, but she knows he is there, "because she's a witch and can tell things." She then bids the boy to conceal his face and calls out: "You man, come out; but don't speak."

Templar comes out of hiding and faces her, while the boy hides his face. She imposes silence on the intruder and by signs he agrees not to speak. She offers to tell Templar's fortune and writes the following on a card:

"You will go beyond the seas. There is money for you. And love. But something dreadful will happen you. Something terrible. And it will be the person you wished about's fault. I mean through her.——"

"You'll be in frightful danger," she added, "and there is something about a bend in it."

As Templar is bound for the war he feels creepy about the prediction. He leaves, as she requests, without uttering a sound. She then tells Denny, the crippled boy, who piped for her, that it was a "mako bellevo" of hers, that no outsider had been present at all. He believes her to be a witch and questions no more.

Templar learns that Sandra is little Alexandra Mundy, the granddaughter of the rich owner of a neighboring estate; that her mother was an actress and both her parents are dead. Her grandfather, being away most of the time, she was allowed to run free in the woods and with little restraint from her governess.

Templar returns eight years later from the war to learn from her uncle and aunt that the wood nymph has disappeared. The crippled boy is gone, too. Her grandfather had failed and Sandra, with her nurse, packed up all their belongings and went away—by one knew whither.

"BUT there was enough to satisfy the creditors, and a little bit over, you must remember that, Louise."

"Ah, but she didn't know that. It's the principle I think of. Well, of course Mr. Wigram set doctors on to her track, and they found her. She set him at defiance, said the things were hers, and she was of age and wouldn't have a guardian. And he said he was trustee for the little that was left. And she told him to keep it, and have a bono with it. He looked as if he needed one, she said. But the only thing was that she got round him somehow in the end—made him promise not to tell where she'd gone, or what she was doing, and to let her keep her stolen goods."

"Louise!"

"Well, the principle's the thing, Henry. And some very nice people have taken the Mount—retired Indian people; she goes in for archery, and he's a great gardener—most desirable neighbors."

When the aunt had talked herself into sleepiness and retirement, the uncle said:

"That girl, you know, I'm sorry for her myself. She never had a chance. The old boy left her to herself till she got into mischief, as she was bound to do—bound to do. It's only human nature, and after that he never let her alone for a minute. Strict school—like a convent—hars to the windows and no holidays—Difficult or backward girls, you know. I'm not sure they didn't flog the girls.

"Anyhow, every one thought he'd broken her spirit. She came home three or four months before the end. They say he never spoke to her, though he was living at home then."

Templar saw the free grace of the dancing girl in the forest glade, and he saw the school for difficult and backward girls, with bars, and the rest of it. He felt a pang of the soul so keen as to be also a pang of the body—the kind of fine thrill of physical sympathy that pierces you when you see a child cut its hand or squeeze its finger in a door.

The Story of the Music Master

"I don't wonder she bolted," he said. "What was it she'd done?—The mischief she got into, I mean?"

"Well, no one knew exactly. Your aunt has her own opinion. I expect she thought it was too shocking to talk to you about. Contaminate the young, and so on.

"The man was her music master—a black, curly oily, snub-nosed little beast, like a half-bred wet retriever. Danced clever at his beastly music. No other good points. He lodged at the baker's.

"Old Mundy came back just in time, or just too late. Some people think one and some the other. Anyhow, there was a blazing row. He'd only himself to thank for it all. Unforgiving old ass."

"It's jolly hard lines on the girl," said Edmund, and experienced a sense of guilt. Quite unreasonably, for how could he have helped? He had never even spoken to her. He might have spoken something—might have written something. "You have made a friend to-day"—"If ever you are in trouble count on me." Idiot. One does not do such things except in books.

"And no one knows where she's gone?" he asked.

"To the demnition bow-wows, your aunt thinks—but I don't know. If she went, she went with her eyes open. The girl was no fool. And I thought her not bad-looking. And she had a way with her—I'm not sure that she isn't the sort of a girl a man loses his head over—perfectly good, I think. It seems a waste of good material if she'd had a decent home."

"If you and aunty had adopted her," said Edmund, and wondered.

"As a matter of fact," said the uncle, looking disparagingly at his cigar, "I did suggest something of the kind when she was quite small. She was an engaging little thing. Old Mundy cut me for two years after that.

Templar's heart warmed to his uncle.

"And aunty?" he asked.

"Oh, she'd have liked it. You know we only had one child, little Louie, that died. Your aunt wanted it more than I did—I think perhaps that's the reason why she's so bitter about the girl. Feels what one could have made of her, and all that. Let's toddle now, shall we?"

Back in the Forest

Next noon Templar made a little pilgrimage to that glade in the forest that had seen the child dancing. At least he set out on that pilgrimage. But he could not find the shrine.

Eight years loosen the outline of undergrowths, as well as the tongues of aunts. There are many glades which might have been the glade, but none that indubitably was it.

He went down towards Ringwood with mixed emotions such as—he was hungry. It was nearly luncheon time—eight years was a good long while—and "what a deuced shame. Poor, pretty, brave little thing."

He thought of her again in the train later in the day, looking out through vistas of forest. It was annoying to remember a person after nearly forgetting her for eight years, or seven wq it and then to find that there would be nothing more to remember than there was seven years ago, or eight. And he was sorry for the girl.

The discerning reader will not waste any pity on him. The discerning reader knows perfectly that I am only dealing on his slight disappointment in order to emphasize the slight pleasure he will feel when he does meet her.

Of course he will have to meet her. It is not likely that any one out of a leading novella would take the trouble to describe the meeting between a man and a girl unless there were to be a meeting. And quite soon too. You can tell that by the masterly way in which I have dealt with all that happened to the two of them during that eight years.

I might have made chapters and chapters out of that, and it wouldn't have been exactly padding either. It would have been quite legitimate.

But this story is not a problem novel, nor a study in realism. It is just the story of the way things happened, the most curious and unlikely things—some of them.

He would have liked to see her again then and there—but things like that don't happen. Of course there had been girls—but the thin, bare-armed nymph of the forest hadn't been girls, nor come at all into the province of a young man's fancy over which "girls" reign. She had been a child, a witch, a wonder.

"Well, it's a pity," said Mr. Templar, and leaned back in his corner.

Perhaps I have been too reticent; perhaps you would have liked to know more about what happened in those eight years, and I, who thought to spare you, have only irritated your curiosity. In case this should be so I will tell you more than Mr. Templar's aunt knew—much more. Indeed, if she could have lived to read these pages, she would not have felt that she had lived in vain.

The Walks in the Woods

Well then—it really was true about the music master who was like a wet retriever. There had certainly been a something. The retriever had taught the lame youth music, and then Alexandra had wanted to learn. And the retriever, moving about in the forest, had sniffed out the sylvan theatre and seen the dance.

Quite a number of people in the neighborhood knew that little Miss Mundy went for a walk on Sunday with the music master. And one of these people wrote an anonymous letter to the grandfather which brought him back from his raging Venetian haunts—just in time—or just too late.

Anyhow, the retriever was kicked and retrieved growling. But the village gossip-mistress could have told you that Mr. Mundy, to the time of his death, every Christmas—a feast which he always celebrated at home—did send a letter addressed to the retriever at his kennel, which was somewhere in Highbury, New Park.

It was, by the way, at the railway station that Mr. Mundy had come face to face with the retriever—and there is no doubt that Sandra was with him. Quite half a dozen people knew that. Some people said they had first class tickets to London, but this could not have been, because the retriever always traveled third class instead of in the dog box where he belonged.

HARVARD MEN DON'T KNOW PROFESSORS

The Crimson, the Harvard College daily newspaper, is worried because the students do not get acquainted with the famous professors of the University. In an editorial to-day the Crimson says: "Many students there are in the University who are not even on speaking acquaintance with a single one of their post or present instructors. Almost every member of the faculty is at home to students some hours during every week. Certainly, a pleasure hour could not be spent more profitably than in accepting such hospitality."

WARN STOCKHOLDERS OF PROVIDENCE ROAD

Yes, Race Murder Is Worse Than Race Suicide

The Murders by Dirt and Preventable Diseases, Including Needless Murders of Infants, Are Humanity's Greatest Physical Curse

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal-Examiner

Every year in the United States more than five hundred thousand human beings die NEEDLESSLY. That is to say, these five hundred thousand lives need not be sacrificed. Every one of them could be saved by intelligence, by governmental realization of its responsibilities and powers.

Here for your consideration are a few facts put before the public by C. W. Stiles, a distinguished scientist of the United States public health and marine hospital service.

Mr. Stiles is the discoverer of the disease due to the hookworm. He is a man who studies intelligently questions of public health.

In the United States every year there are one million three hundred thousand deaths. Among these, only a few are due to old age—which will be, barring accidents, the only cause of death when human beings become really civilized and intelligent.

Of the 1,300,000 deaths every year six hundred and thirty thousand are due to preventable causes.

Thirty-five thousand are killed by typhoid alone. And remember that typhoid fever is caused always and only by the swallowing of filth in food or in water containing typhoid germs. Typhoid means dirt; it means that the people eat dirt—and dirt in its worst form.

In this country every year out of a hundred thousand inhabitants we lose 46.5 by typhoid. In Germany the loss is only 6.3, and in Switzerland only 4.80 per hundred thousand. This means in plain English that this highly civilized and intellectual and rich republic of ours is seven times as dirty as Germany and ten times as dirty as Switzerland.

In addition to the thirty-five thousand that die of typhoid in our country every year about three hundred thousand get typhoid and are cured. We have plenty of money and plenty of good doctors. And when we have eaten the filthy food or have drunken the dirty water we spend money and intelligence to get well.

It is a pity that some money and some intelligence—including preventive measures by the doctors and efforts of the health departments—could not be used to PREVENT the disease instead of being devoted entirely to curing it.

Every year in the United States a hundred and fifty thousand American citizens are put in the ground—killed by consumption. And all the time there are about five hundred thousand of us living and suffering from the same disease in a pronounced stage, and an infinitely greater number carrying the disease germ about with them in a less highly developed form. Intelligence, the fight against poverty, vile workshops, lack of air and impure milk can stamp out this disease or reduce its power, as we have already reduced the power of smallpox.

Worst of all are the murders of children, the murders of ignorance, poverty and governmental indifference.

Of all the children born in America one in six dies in the first year. And about a third of all American children die before they are five years old.

When you know that among the prosperous, well-fed classes the children are rarely allowed to die; when you see, for instance, an intelligent man like George Gould with seven children, every one of them living and healthy, and one of them the physical champion of the world, you can guess how much poverty and neglect have to do with the useless murders of children, and how much more than her share the POOR mother contributes to the number of baby graves in the cemeteries.

Every year in America there are more than one million five hundred thousand cases of malaria and about twelve thousand deaths from that disease, which is a very slow disease. All these cases of malaria are caused by mosquitoes. Indifference on the part of the Government, combined with land speculation, is responsible for the mosquitoes and their breeding grounds. If the mosquito were the size of a wolf and killed even five hundred people in a year the whole army of the United States would be put to work killing wolves. If the typhoid germ that kills thirty-five thousand annually, or the tuberculosis germ that kills a hundred and fifty thousand annually were as big as a rhinoceros, the United States Government would manufacture Gatling guns to kill them off. But because the worst disease germs are invisible, and the malaria and yellow fever spreading mosquito is so small we do practically nothing.

Every year more than five hundred thousand Americans go to their graves needlessly, and there is no really energetic national, State or local effort to fight the diseases that kill. It is all very nice and pretty to preach against race suicide by women. But Heaven knows the women do their duty far more thoroughly than the men. We could not blame them if the mothers, especially the poor mothers, should unite in saying, "Let governments and men do more to protect from needless death the children already born and talk less about more babies."

Intelligence could save five hundred thousand lives per year in this country alone—five millions in a century. And remember that the only real property on earth is THOUGHT, and man is the only thinking machine. It ought to be worth while to save him.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

HELP TO BOOM BOSTON

Editor AMERICAN:

The Boston Chamber of Commerce is soon to issue a leaflet advertising the city and it occurs to me that there are many readers of the AMERICAN who know about many special advantages of Boston which are not matters of common knowledge. Every patriotic citizen should write out on a post card the particular "advantage" he thinks should be advertised and send it to the publicity committee, Boston Chamber of Commerce. The leaflet will be a reprint from the book which the chamber is soon to publish telling to all the world the great advantages of the metropolis of New England.

I am a constant reader of the AMERICAN and I heartily indorse the statement made by Corporal Short, United States Army. The blockheads of the navy would greatly appreciate having the old canteen back aboard our ships. I dare say it would benefit the navy as well as the army. EGBERT SECOR.

The Money Lovers

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal-Examiner

WE hear a great deal about the money-loving and money-making Americans. We have come to think of our country as a mine or a mint, and of our countrymen as individuals holding only money standards and possessing no ideals save ideals of wealth.

Yet a careful study of the world and a careful analysis of many people in many lands must give the thoughtful American, who is at once logical and just, a very different estimate of his compatriots from this generally accepted one.

When compared with other people in other countries the typical American is, in fact, THE LEAST MERCENARY AND THE MOST DISINTERESTED OF ALL.

Nowhere else on earth can be found so many men and women who are giving time and thought to the betterment of conditions for the masses, with no self-interest involved in the matter, as in America. Nowhere else is the kindly impulse toward the stranger within the gates so freely and spontaneously shown, with no thought of a return or reward; and nowhere else is money laid of such small value as in America.

More Avaricious Than Americans

Americans talk of money more than any other people. BUT ALL OTHER NATIONALITIES THINK MORE ABOUT MONEY THAN WE DO. ALL OTHER NATIONALITIES ARE MORE AVARICIOUS THAN THE AMERICANS.

The European is a more highly cultured being than the American; he understands better what NOT TO SAY. The Japanese, the Chinese, the Javanese, the Arabian, the Hindu are all more subtle and more cunning than the American in hiding what they think, but each and every one thinks of money, desires money and loves money more than does the American. Each is more eternally on the watch for it.

Each and every one is more frequently MONEY MOVED in his social impulses, and money governed, in what seems to be spontaneous actions, than the American.

All these assertions refer to the world outside of business, outside of mart and trade, outside of politics—the world one encounters in the daily experiences of life, in the experiences of travel, in the casual association of human beings apart from money-mad or society-mad centres.

It refers to the men and women who form the warp and woof of the human covering of this old earth—the fathers and mothers, the teachers and toilers, the thinkers and workers of the world.

In every land may be found great souls; in every country disinterested, unselfish souls seeking first the "Kingdom of Heaven" in their own individual way of belief, and living always more for others than for self.

Thank God for America!

But aside from these solitary peaks, which stand forth like human mountains in the landscape of earth, nowhere, save in America, are there so many CONTINUOUS MOUNTAIN RANGES OF ALTRUISTIC AND UNMERCENARY HUMAN BEINGS AS ARE TO BE FOUND IN AMERICA.

In every land are men and women who are self-seeking and who hide some are to grind behind each outwardly kind act, BUT IN EVERY OTHER LAND ON EARTH THERE ARE TEN AXES TO BE FOUND TO ONE IN AMERICA!

Thank God for America!

It is a crude land in many ways; it has much to learn; it lacks many of the finer qualities which go toward making life agreeable to the sensitive; BUT IT IS THE MOST UNSELFISH, THE KINDEST HEARTED AND THE LEAST MERCENARY LAND ON EARTH.

I've Found Out Since

By KENNETT HARRIS

She had a nice complexion, blending lilies with the rose,
She had a pretty dimple and a lovely Grecian nose.
No wonder she was bothered with an endless swarm of beaux,
Before she really met her fairy prince.
She has a peek of trouble with the proper sort of cream,
And just the brand of carmine that now makes her such a dream
But things are very seldom quite exactly what they seem,
I've found out since.

She had a winsome manner and a low, caressing voice,
She had the smile that always makes a person's heart rejoice;
Her language was well chosen. It was rather more than choice
In fact, she showed a tendency to mince.
She has a way of speaking—an unpleasant sort of way—
There's never much mistaking what the lady has to say.
She jumps upon a fellow if he gets too blithe and gay,
I've found out since.

She had me fairly going. I was very much in doubt.
She surely had me guessing if I ever would win out.
She smiled on other fellows, then, who used to hang about,
And frowned on me at times, which made me wince.
I had no cause for worry, though, of course, I couldn't tell
She'd marked me for her fall guy—and I WAS the guy that fell.
I thought I'd got a treasure, and she knew that she'd done well,
I've found out since.

He Writes About His Papa's Lyrics

By WILLIAM P. KIRK

THE reason I was out so late this afternoon was beekaus I was talking with a big show man, sed Pa to Ma wen he came home after the dinner was cold. He is one of the biggest show men in the country. Tell me his naim, sed Ma. wud, sed Pa, if I thought that you wud keep it under yure hat, but you know how wimmen is. They cant keep a secret.

Oh, sed Ma, I doant know. I haven't told all my girlfrens back West about the lait hours you keep, & the peepul you sumtimes bring to the house. Doant tell me if you doant want to, sed Ma, but I see the naim you had no rite to keep dinner waiting. I guess you wud do well to explain, Ma sed, wether I keep it under my hat or not.

Well, said Pa, the naim of this man dosent matter, and thare is no use of my telling you his address. For fear I mite fone him sonta, sed Ma. Yes, sed Pa, for fear you mite fone him. I doant want you mixing up in my big bizness enterprises, sed Pa. But I will tell you the neiter of the matter over which we spent so much time talking over. I am going to rite the libriks for a new play. I must have two of them done sonta, Pa sed, so if you & littel Bobbie will parding me, Pa sed, I will go rite in the library & start in.

All rite, sed Ma. But doant I git my dinner first? sed Pa. No, Ma sed, it is after 8 o'clock & everything is put away. Besides she sed, if you are going to rite two bricks you mussent eat first. Byron always wrote better on a empty stumick, sed Ma.

So Pa went into the library & he began to rite & smoak. Every onse in a while we cud hear him say Ahe, a grate line, a grate line. Did you git that, Bobbie? Ma wud say to me. Yure father is criticising him-self. He is a very stern critick of him-self. He almost hates him-self, Bobbie, Ma sed.

I Ma kep reeding her magazine & I kep dooing my ritchmetick, & after a littel while Pa calm out in the parlor & clesred his throte. I am all reddy, sed Pa. All reddy for what? sed Ma. Reddy to reed you the libriks, sed Pa. I doant want to hear them, Ma sed. I am afrade I cudent keep it under my hat. Wimmen cant keep a secret.

But wen Ma saw how funny Pa looked she sed Go ahed, deerest one, & let littel Bobbie & me try to grasp at least part of the meening of yure wunderful libriks.

The first one, sed Pa, is called "Springtime Reveries." This is how it goes:

"Wen luv is young in springtime
& skie is smiling too.
The birds in every burne to luv,
What else cud they al do?"

Doant you think that is dainty? sed Pa. I always thought so, sed Ma, I herd Harry Wedruff sing it once in som college play, and it was certainly dainty.

You dont meen to say I wud lift stuff? sed Pa. You doant think I wud Plagirize? No, sed Ma, not any more than Lester, but jest the saim I am sure that eether you forgot you heard that librick or else you never plate swiped it.

Well, all rite, sed Pa, all rite, then I wont read you a other line. I doant care what you think anyway, sed Pa. Goodnite, Alan Dale, sed Pa. Good-nite, Jimmy Valentine, sed Ma.

Editor AMERICAN:

What is the cost to the government of the United States postal department in the aggregate for mailing two-cent letters? Hanniker Heaton, M. P., member for Canterbury, England, states that the cost of carrying a letter from one point in the United Kingdom to any other is one-thirty-sixth of a penny (two cents) or one-eighteenth of a cent. Further, if you replace a letter either in the United States or Great Britain and that letter should be stolen or lost you cannot claim one cent. K. J.

LOVE IS INCOMPARABLE

Editor AMERICAN:

Some time ago a reader of the AMERICAN wrote to ask: "What is 'true' love," and as yet you in your turn left it to be answered by the thousands of AMERICAN readers. Since that time many writers have tried (for that they could only do in answer what they think is a "question. Know, therefore, that Love, like Truth, is incomparable. We could not and would not attempt to ask "What is 'true Truth'" knowing, as we do, that there is no false Truth, but that Love is ever true, supreme and infallible. The question that is to be asked or answered is "What is Love?"
